

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF INSURANCE,
IN FOUR BOOKS;

- I. OF MARINE INSURANCE,
- II. OF BOTTOMRY AND RESPONDENTIA,
- III. OF INSURANCE UPON LIVES,
- IV. OF INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

By SAMUEL MARSHALL, SERJEANT AT LAW.

THE SECOND EDITION, WITH CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.
VOL. II.

I laudo mercatorem, qui fidem, etiam contra leges datam, servat; sed, ei laudo judicem, qui fraudes et nequitias mercatorum non fovet, et rescindit pactiones quas lex rescindi jubet. Judicis est leges sequi; nec disputare an tibi ipse faciat assicuratorem, qui fidem datam violat.—Ergo, turpiter faciat; sed, et turpiter facit qui contra leges pacilitur.

Bynt. Quest. jur. priv. lib. 4. c. 5.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY A. STRAHAN, LAW PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY, FOR J. BUTTERWORTH, LAW BOOKSELLER, FLEET-STREET, AND J. COOKE, ORMOND QUAY, DUBLIN.

1808.

NAMES OF THE CASES CITED.

Those in Italics are cited from Manuscript Notes.

Where a Case refers to several Pages, the first is generally that in which it is cited most at large.

	Page.		Page.
A FRICAN Company v. Bull	149	Anderson, Minnett v.	- 265
Aguilar v. Rodgers	- 673	Anderson, Parr v.	- 196
Airy v. Bland	- 294	Angerstein, Charaud v.	- 469
Allen v. Hearne	- 119	Angerstein, Tidswell v.	- 778
Allwood v. Henkle	- 593	Appleton, Bird v.	262, 415, 419
Amery v. Rodgers	- 619, 709	Atty, Dawson v.	- 452
Anderson v. Edie	- 776
Anderson v. Pitcher	- 373	Baillie v. Modigliani	- 728
Anderson v. Ro. Ex. Assur.	- 594	Barber v. Fletcher	- 454
Andrée v. Fletcher	- 144, 643	Barclay v. Cousins	99, 138
Angerstein v. Bell	- 262	Baring v. Christie	- 430
Anonimous from Skin.	- 265	Baring v. Clugget	- 428
Anonimous from 2 Vern.	- 61	Baring v. Day	- 548
Anthon v. Fisher	- 504	Baring v. Roy. Ex. Assur.	- 433
Assievedo v. Cambridge	124, 125, 501	Baring v. Henkle	- 140
Atherfold v. Beard	- 119	Barker v. Blakes	- 856
Atty v. Lindo	- 220	Barras v. Lond. Assur.	- 266
Aubert v. Maze	- 51	Burton v. Wolliford	- 753
Audley v. Duff	- 669, 367	Barzillay v. Lewis	398, 411, 417
		Bates v. Grabham	- 344, 706
Abel, McCarthy v.	- 606	Bean v. Stupart	- 350
Abel, Morck v.	- 647, 74	Beatson v. Haworth	- 189, 325
Aguilar, Geyer v.	- 391, 404	Beckwith v. Sydebotham	- 832
Allen, Dick v.	- 622	Bell v. Gilson	- 86, 34, 312
Allen, Long v.	- 660	Bendyr v. Oyle	- 27
Anderson, Camden v.	65, 181, 712	Bent v. Baker	- 704, 301
Anderson, Camden v. (2d case)	115	Berens v. Rucker	- 502
		Bermon v. Woodbridge	662, 78
		b	Bernard,

	Page.		Page.
Bernard v. Bridgman	- 740	Bell, Price v.	- 420
Bernardi v. Motteux	395, 401, 417, 426	Bell, Raine v.	- 835
Betfey (Kruger) Case of the	- 391	Bendylack, Tabbs v.	- 386
Biggs v. Lawrence	- 647	Bernett, Tomkins v.	- 490
Bird v. Appleton	74, 262, 415, 419	Berthon, Kenyon v.	- 350
Birkley v. Pregrave	- 542, 545	Bettingham, Ricardo v.	39, 504
Bize v. Fletcher	- 459, 350	Bewick, De Guino v.	- 365
Blackhurst v. Cockell	- 351	Bewick, Oldman v.	809, 350, 79
Blankley v. Winstanley	- 532	Bewick, Thelluffon v.	- 624
Boehm v. Bell	- 644, 109	Bird, Kent v.	- 133
Bolton v. Gladstone	- 434	Black, Fox v.	- 186
Bond v. Gonfales	- 210	Black, Glover v.	317, 118, 710
Bond v. Nutt	- 353, 210, 349	Black, Pattison v.	- 781
Booth v. Hodgson	- 50	Blackburne, Cornu v.	- 504
Bowring v. Elmslie	- 228, 233	Blackiston, Hodgson v.	- 600
Boyfield v. Brown	587, 227, 619	Blakes, Barker v.	- 836
Brandon v. Curling	- 40	Blakes, Middlewood v.	328, 203
Brandon v. Nesbitt	38, 86, 697	Bland, Airy v.	- 294
Brewster v. Kitchell	40	Boehm, Carter v.	479, 90, 465, 648
Bristow v. Towers	39, 34, 86, 697	Boehm, Ruffel v.	- 707
Brough v. Whitmore	723, 270, 319	Boldero, Godfall v.	- 777
Brown v. Newnham	- 701	Bolton, Dehson v.	- 239
Buller v. Fisher	- 493	Bolton, Long v.	- 382, 474
Burnett v. Kensington	234, 225, 228, 232, 486	Bovil, Calvert v.	- 402
Bush v. Fearon	- 735	Bovil, Driscoll v.	211, 191, 276
		Bovil, Oddly v.	- 391
Backhouse, French v.	- 297	Bourdieu, Campbell v.	- 210
Badcock, Sadler's Company v.	804	Bourdieu, Journu v.	- 223
	800	Bourdieu, Lowry v.	640, 642, 649
Baker, Bent v.	704, 301	Bourdieu, Nutt v.	- 526, 534
Bald, Caldwell v.	- 107	Bourdellion, Scott v.	- 831
Bance, Whitehead v.	- 499	Boydell, Simon v.	- 671
Banks, Erasmus v.	- 138	Boydell, Woolridge v.	- 324, 184
Banks, Pattison v.	- 732	Bradley, Furneaux v.	- 584, 486
Barnard, Wright v.	- 159	Bradshaw, Rofs v.	- 770
Barnevelt, Pawson v.	- 349	Bridge, Lyons v.	- 767
Barrell, Dick v.	- 168	Bridge, Syers v.	- 197, 322
Beach, Lee v.	- 160	Bridgeman, Bernard v.	- 740
Beard, Atherfold v.	- 119	Brogden, Elton v.	- 520, 212
Bell, Angerstein v.	- 262	Brook, Watts v.	- 53
Bell, Boehm v.	- 644, 109	Brown, Boyfield v.	587, 227, 619
Bell, Chalmers v.	- 64	Brown, Green v.	- 489
Bell, McAndrews v.	469, 709	Brown, Stamina v.	- 524
Bell, Pollard v.	- 413, 420	Bruce, Hyde v.	- 347
Bell, Potts v.	- 87, 696	Brutton, Phillis v.	- 467, 453
		Buggin, Hartley v.	- 200, 185
		Bull,

	Page.		Page.
Kennoway, Noble v.	258, 19, 270	Lafcelles, Smith v.	105, 297
Kensington, Burnett v.	234, 225, 228, 232, 486	Latham, Terry v.	606
Kensington, Garrells v.	436	Lawrence, Biggs v.	647
Kent, Joy v.	- 739	Lee, Penfon v.	655 694
King, Cary v.	692, 720, 552	Leeds (Duke of), Pugh v.	782
King, Pond v.	- 497	Legendra, Jeffrey v.	- 378
Kirwan, France v.	- 369	Legg, Farmer v.	178, 413
Knightley, Kaines v.	706, 345	Le Mesurier, Flint v.	107, 138
Kitchell, Brewster v.	- 40	Le Mesurier, Gamba v.	- 41
		Le Mesurier, Kellner v.	675, 41, 114
La Caussade v. White	646	Lewis, Barzillay v.	398, 411, 417
Langdale v. Mason	- 791	Lindo, Atty v.	- 220
Lateward v. Curling	- 539	Liotard, Cox. v.	732, 783
Lavabre v. Watton	- 192	Lond. Assur. Barratts v.	265
Lavabre v. Wilson	192, 209, 185, 205, 275	Lond. Assur. Cantillon v.	223, 230, 233, 235
Law v. Hollingworth	165, 413	Lond. Assur. De Ghetoff v.	679
Lawrence v. Sidebotham	199, 211	Lond. Assur. Drinkwater v.	790, 792
Leatham v. Terry	- 606	Lond. Assur. Godin v.	105, 150
Leccras v. Hughes	108, 112, 138, 631	Lond. Assur. Motteux v.	207, 262, 344
Lee v. Beach	160	Lond. Assur. Rucker v.	- 253
Lees v. Smith	53	Ludlow, De Paiba v.	125, 123, 497
Leigh v. Mather	266, 258	Lushington, Nesbitt v.	230, 508, 233, 687, 717
Le Mesurier v. Vaughan	314
Le Pypre v. Farr	124, 135, 289	Maans v. Henderson	302
Lethulier's case	362, 375	M'Andrews v. Bell	469, 709
Lever v. Fletcher	- 61	M'Andrews v. Vaughan	232
Lewin v. Suaffo	- 528	M'Carthy v. Abel	606
Lewis v. Rucker	624, 288, 710	Macdowell v. Fraser	456
Lilly v. Ewer	364	Mace v. Cadell	- 732
Littledale v. Kenyon	- 470	M'Masters v. Shoolbred	581
Livesay v. Ryder	- 732	Manning v. Giff	- 367
Lockyer v. Offley	263, 533, 780	Manning v. Newnham	585
Long v. Allen	- 660	Maria (case of the)	444
Long v. Bolton	- 382, 474	Marriott v. Hampton	732
Long v. Duff	- 382	Marfdon v. Reid	325, 190, 455
Loraine v. Tomlinson	668	Marsh v. Robinson	712, 117, 687
Lothian v. Henderson	430, 385, 393, 413, 428	Marsham v. Dutrey	- 542
Lowry v. Bordieu	640, 642, 646, 649	Martin v. Sitwell	- 123
Lubbock v. Potts	43, 41, 64, 648	Mason v. Sainsbury	794
Lubbock v. Rowcroft	220, 587	Mason v. Scurray	226, 223, 588
Lucena v. Craufurd	113, 685	Mathie v. Potts	- 689
Lynch v. Dalzell	- 801	Mayne v. Walter	397, 405, 418, 478
Lyons v. Bridge	- 707	Menetony v. Dunlop	- 264
		Meyer v. Greigson	658, 667, 676
			Middlewood

	Page.		Page.
Middlewood v. Blakes	328, 203	Nantes v. Thompson	686, 41, 114
Miller v. Fletcher	578, 171, 562,	Nayade, (case of the)	- 523
	615	Neal v. Irving	- 708
Mills v. Roebuck	- 161	Nesbitt v. Luffington	230, 508, 233
Minnett v. Anderson	- 265		689, 717
Mitchell v. Cockburn	- 48	Nesbitt v. Whitmore	- 655
Mitchell v. Edie	590, 614	Newby v. Read	- 146, 489
Mollison v. Staples	- 121	Newman v. Cazalet	- 763
Montgomery v. Egginton	278, 92	Noble v. Kennoway	258, 19, 270
Morck v. Abel	- 647, 74	Norvill v. St. Barbe	- 837
Morse v. Sluc	- 242	Nutt v. Bourdieu	- 526, 534
Moses v. Macfarlane	732
Moss v. Byrom	283, 521	Natally, Strong v.	- 256
Motteux v. Lond. Assur.	207, 262,	Nesbitt, Brandon v.	38, 86, 697
	344	Newnham, Brown v.	- 701
Moufe's case	- 535	Newnham, De Costa v.	- 598
Murdock v. Potts	- 326	Newnham, Manning v.	- 585
		Nutt, Bond v.	353, 210, 349
McCarthy, Rogers v.	- 341	Nutt, Schoolbred v.	- 475, 154
Macfarlane, Moses v.	- 732
Machell, Gale v.	- 659	Oddy v. Bovill	- 391
Mackenzie, Jenkins v.	- 584	Odin, (case of the)	- 523
McVicar, Sellar v.	323, 280, 281	Oldman v. Berwick	809, 350, 790
Malcolm, Hodgson v.	490, 687	Oliver v. Cowley	- 160
Margetson, Henrickson v.	101, 169	Oyen Flad (case of the)	- 389
Marryat, Wilfon v.	68, 387, 183
Mason, Gift v.	84, 89, 34	Offley, Hinchman v.	173, 145
Mason, Langdale v.	- 791	Offley, Locker v.	263, 533, 780
Mather, Fitzherbert v.	457, 300	Oyle, Bendyr v.	- 27
Mather, Leigh v.	- 266, 258
Maylor, Rodgers v.	634, 636, 682	Page v. Fry	- 684
Maynard, Harford v.	- 24	Page v. Rogers	- 731
Maze, Aubert v.	- 51	Parker v. Carter	- 293
Mendes, Hamilton v.	572, 514,	Parkinson v. Collier	- 257
	580, 584	Parr v. Anderson	- 196
Millar, Harrison v.	52, 54	Patterson v. Black	- 781
Milligan, Peters v.	- 544	Pattison v. Banks	- 732
Modigliani, Baillie v.	- 728	Pawson v. Barnevelt	349
Modigliani, Dennison v.	281, 284	Pawson v. Watson	458, 349, 451,
Modigliani, Way v.	- 326		454
Molineux, Hall v.	- 313	Pelly v. Roy. Ex. Assur.	269, 168,
Morley, Gordon v.	363, 210		205
Motteux, Bernardi v.	395, 401,	Penfon v. Lee	- 655, 694
	417, 426	Perchard v. Whitmore	683
Motteux, Delmada v.	- 82	Peters v. Milligan	544
Moy, Came v.	- 27	Phyn v. Roy. Ex. Assur.	519
Muilman, Woolmer v.	- 435	Planché v. Fletcher	461, 327, 34, 50

	Page.
Plantamour v. Staples	169, 102, 171, 581
Pollard v. Bell	- 413, 420
Pond v. King	- 497
Potts v. Bell	- 37, 646
Praye v. Edie	- 307
Price v. Bell	- 420
Pringle v. Hartley	- 566, 560
Pugh v. Duke of Leeds	- 782
<hr/>
Parker, Rich v.	- 409
Parkinson, Eden v.	- 387
Parkinson, Grant v.	- 97, 107, 138
Parr, Rhol v.	- 492, 620, 687
Parry, Cox v.	- 307
Passmore, Driscoll v.	- 276, 211
Patten, Hill v.	- 342
Paxton, Grant v.	260, 274, 323
Penaluna, Clugas v.	- 647
Pickersgill, Hopkins v.	- 727
Pigou, Hibbert v.	- 369
Pitcher, Anderson v.	- 373
Pole, Fitzgerald v.	- 584, 486
Poole, Eden v.	- 721
Poole , Fletcher v.	- 721
Poole, Willis v.	- 771
Porter, Senat v.	- 716
Potts, Lubbock v.	43, 41, 64, 648
Potts, Matthie v.	- 689
Potts, Murdock v.	- 326
Potts, Sheriff v.	188, 275, 634
Prescoti, Visger v.	- 830
Presgrave, Birkley v.	- 542, 545
Prinsep, Hunter v.	- 316
Proudfoot, Delbye v.	- 27
<hr/>
Raine v. Bell	- 835
Randall v. Cockran	- 611
Ratcliffe v. Shoolbred	468, 465
Rhol v. Parr	- 492, 620, 687
Rich v. Parker	- 409
Ricord v. Bettenham	39, 504
Ridout v. Johnson	- 704
Rising v. Burnitt	- 730, 682
Roberts v. Fennereau	- 453
Roberts v. Trenayne	- 749
Robertson v. Ewer	721, 513

	Page.
Robertson v. French	323, 261, 711
Robson v. Wilson	- 294
Rodgers v. Maylor	634, 636, 682
Roebuck v. Hammerton	119, 775
Rogers v. Davis	- 147
Rogers v. McCarthy	- 341
Rois v. Bradshaw	- 770
Rofs v. Hunter	- 535, 727, 717
Rofs v. Thwaites	- 319
Rotch v. Edie	- 44, 511, 722
Rothwell v. Cooke	- 657
Routledge v. Burrell	810, 350, 769, 790
Rucker v. Hollingbury	- 651
Rucker v. Lond. Ass.	- 253
Russel v. Boehm	- 709
<hr/>
Randall, Jones v	- 119
Read, Newby v.	- 146, 489
Reallon, Wilton v.	- 307
Redthaw, Guibert v.	- 208
Redthaw, Smith v.	- 361
Reed, Weymell v.	- 647
Reid, Marsden v.	325, 190, 455
Rimington, Gordon v.	720
Richardson, Hodgson v.	322, 702
Roberts, Covington v.	- 543
Robinson, Haddock v.	218, 587
Robinson, Marsh v.	712 117, 687
Rockwood, Havilock v.	596, 713
Rodgers, Aguilar v.	- 673
Rodgers, Amery v.	- 619, 709
Rodgers, Furtado v.	- 40
Rodgers, Heywood v.	- 476, 154
Roebuck, Mills v.	- 161
Rogers, Page v.	- 731
Rolleston, Hibbert v.	- 117
Rowcroft, Dyson v.	238, 228, 486
Rowcroft, Earle v.	- 522
Rowcroft, Lubbock v.	220, 587
Rowcroft, Thomson v.	609, 100
Rucker, Berens v	502
Rucker, Lewis v.	684, 288, 710
Roy. Ex. Assur. Anderson v.	594
Roy. Ex. Assur. Baring v.	433
Roy. Ex. Assur. Carter v.	202
Roy. Ex. Assur. Henkle v.	343, 34
	Roy.

	Page,		Page,
Roy. Ex. Assur. Hurry v.	254	Stott v. Vaughan	184, 202, 327
Roy. Ex. Assur. Hurry v. 2d case	631	Story v. Natally	- 256
Roy. Ex. Assur. Pelly v.	269, 168	Suister v. Coel	- 28
	205	Sullivan v. Greaves	- 49
Roy. Ex. Assur. Phyn v.	519	Sumner v. Green	- 745
Ryan, Kewley v.	174, 172, 184,	Syers v. Bridge	- 197, 322
	327	Sainbury, Mason v.	- 794
Ryder, Livesay v.	- 732	St. Barbe, Cazalet v.	- 583, 486
Sadler's Company v. Badcock	804,	St. Barbe, Norvill v.	- 837
	800	Sands v.	- 501
Saint Juan Baptista (case of the)	449	Scandaret, Da Costa v.	472, 050
Saloucci v. Johnson	387, 405, 435,	Schinoll, Jones v.	- 717, 555
	437, 508	Scott, Frogmorton v.	- 136
Saloucci v. Woodmase	- 401	Scurray, Mason v.	223, 226, 588
Salvador v. Hopkins	- 271	Secretan, Chrillie v.	41 177, 424
—— v. Sands	- 501	Secretan, Hill v.	- 114
Salwin v. James	- 799	Selwyn, Chitty v.	- 262, 679
Santa Cruz (case of the)	553	Sheddon, Johnson v.	- 629
Sarah Christina, (case of the)	80	Sheddon, Thelluson v.	- 832
Scott v. Bourdillion	- 831	Shoolbred, M'Masters v.	581
Scott v. Thompson	- 204	Shoolbred, Ratcliffe v.	468, 465
Seamon v. Fonnereau	472, 467	Sidebotham, Lawrence v.	199, 211
Seller v. M'Vicar	- 323, 280	Simmonds, Clason v.	- 190
Seller v. Work	- 299	Simon, Stackpool v.	- 772
Senat v. Porter	- 716	Sitwell, Martin v.	- 123
Sharp v. Gladstone	- 607	Skurray, Mason v.	226, 223, 588
Sharpley v. Hurrell	- 749	Slue, Morse v.	- 242
Shawe v. Felton	- 139	Smith, Lees v.	- 53
Sheriff v. Potts	188, 275, 634	Smith, Wilson v.	224, 232, 234
Shirley v. Wilkinson	- 471	Snow, Stevenson v.	- 377, 655
Shoolbred v. Nutt	475, 154	Staniforth, Tarleton	- 797
Simond v. Boydell	- 671	Staples, Mollison v.	- 121
Smith v. Cologan	- 301	Staples, Plantamour v	169, 102,
Smith v. Lafcelles	105, 297		171, 581
Smith v. Redshaw	- 61	Staples, Thelluson v.	358, 355
Smith v. Surridge	200, 390, 713	Steadman, Williams v.	757
Noome v. Gleen	- 749	Stevens, De Frise v.	521
Sparrow v. Carruthers	- 252	Stoddart, Delany v.	205
Spencer v. Franco	- 514	Stupart, Bean v.	350
Stackpool v. Simon	- 772	Suart, Horncastle v.	279
Stamma v. Brown	- 524	Suasso, Lewin v.	528
Stevenson v. Snow	- 655, 377	Surridge, Smith v.	200, 390, 713
Stewart v. Dunlop	- 468, 300	Sutron, Johnson v.	83
Stitt v. Wardell	128, 208, 275	Swanson, De Vignier v.	- 311
		Sweeting, Goram v.	- 695
		Sydebotham, Beckwith v.	832

	Page.		Page.
Tabbs v. Bendelack	- 386	Vaughan, M'Andrews v.	- 232
Tarleton v. Staniforth	- 797	Vaughan, Le Mesurier v.	- 314
Tatham v. Hodgson	487, 491, 555, 687, 717	Vaughan, Stott v.	184, 202, 327
Taylor v. Woodnefs	- 376	Vaughan, Whitehead v.	- 293
Thelluffon v. Bewicke	- 622	Vigne, Kulen Kemp v.	130, 565 688, 716
Thelluffon v. Fergusson	355, 359	Walker v. Witter	- 393, 424
Thelluffon v. Fletcher	129, 599, 637	Wallace v. Tellfair	- 297, 8
Thelluffon v. Sheddon	832	Walpole v. Ewer	- 762
Thelluffon v. Staples	358, 355	Walrond v. Van Moses	- 388
Thompson v. Rowcroft	604, 100	Waltham v. Thompson	- 376
Thompson v. Taylor	279, 93	Waples v. Eames	- 264
Tidswell v. Angerstein	- 778	Watts v. Brook	- 52
Tiernay v. Etherington	- 304	Way v. Modigliani	- 326
Tomkins v. Bennett	490	Waymell v. Reed	- 647
Tonge v. Watts	- 278, 92, 279	Webb v. Thompson	- 371
Townson v. Guion	- 186	Webster v. De Tillet	- 90, 300
Tyler v. Hern	- 652	Webster v. Forster	- 469
Tyrie v. Fletcher	654, 659, 783	Western v. Wildey	- 757
Tyfon v. Gurney	- 387, 564	Wharton v. De la Rive	- 642
Tarleton, Staniforth v.	- 797	Whitehead v. Bance	- 499
Taylor, Thompson v.	- 279, 93	Whitehead v. Vaughan	293
Tellfair, Wallace v.	- 297, 8	Wilkinson v. Coverdale	298, 300, 807
Terry, Leatham v.	- 606	Williams v. Steadman	757
Tomlinson, Loraine v.	- 668	Willis v. Glover	- 469
Thompson, Nantes v.	686, 41, 114	Willis v. Poole	- 771
Thompson, Scott v.	- 264	Wilson v. Creighton	293
Thompson, Waltham v.	- 376	Wilson v. Duckett	- 650
Thompson, Webb v.	- 371	Wilson v. Marryatt	68, 183, 387
Thornburgh, Whittingham v.	650	Wilson v. Smith	224, 232, 234
Thwaites, Rofs v.	- 319	Wittingham v. Thornburgh	650
Towers, Bristow v.	39, 34, 86, 697	Witton v. Reaston	- 307
Townson, Cock v.	- 195	Wolf v. Horncastle	- 308, 115
Trenayne, Roberts v.	- 749	Wood v. Worley	811, 350, 790
Turner, Dandy v.	- 749	Wooldridge v. Boydeil	324, 184
Vallejo v. Wheeler	528, 521, 533	Woof v. Claggett	212
Vandyk v. Hewitt	646, 643, 649	Woolmer v. Muilman	435
Vandyk v. Whitmore	- 87	Wright v. Barnard	159
Vanharthals v. Halhed	- 83	Walker, Jolly v.	- 195
Veeton v. Wilmot	- 372	Walter, Mayne v.	397, 405, 418, 478
Vifger v. Prescott	- 830	Wardell, Stitt v.	188, 208, 275
Victorin v. Cleeve	- 372	Watson, Lavabre v.	- 192
Vizian v. Grant	- 352	Watson, Pawson v.	458, 349, 451, 452
Vanhatton, Harman v.	- 124	Watts,
Van Moses, Walrond v.	- 388

	Page.		Page.
Watts, Tonge v.	278, 92, 279	Wilson, Lavabre v.	152, 185, 265,
Wheeler, Vallejo v.	528, 521		209, 275
White, Lacauflade v.	646	Wilson, Robson v.	- 294
Whitmore, Brough v.	723, 270, 319	Winstanley, Blankley v.	- 532
Whitmore, Hore v.	352	Withers, Gofs v.	567, 126, 501,
Whitmore, Nesbitt v.	655		510, 512, 564, 580, 587
Whitmore, Perchard v.	683	Witter, Walker v.	393, 424
Whitmore, Vandyk v.	87	Woodbridge, Bermon v.	662, 783
Wilcox, Kruger v.	151	Woodmasts, Salloucci v.	- 401
Wildez, Western v.	757	Woodnefs, Taylor v.	376
Wilkinson, Shirley v.	471	Work, Seller v.	- 299
Williamson, Joyce v.	754, 761	Worsley, Wood v.	811, 350, 790
Williford, Barton v.	- 753
Wilmer, Foster v.	201	Ximenes v. Jaques	. 119
Wilnot, Veedon v.	372
Wilson, Elliot v.	187	Young, Green v.	510, 184
Wilson, Forbes v.	155

A TREATISE

ON THE

LAW OF INSURANCE.

BOOK THE FIRST.

C H A P. XII.

Of Loss.

Preliminary Observations.

A LOSS, in insurance, is the injury or damage sustained by the insured, in consequence of the happening of one or more of the accidents or misfortunes against which the insurer, in consideration of the premium, has undertaken to indemnify the insured. These accidents or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in every policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils (a). In our common policies they are set forth in the following words.

‘Touching the adventures and perils which we the ‘assurers are content to bear, and do take upon us in this ‘voyage, they are of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, ‘pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of mart and coun‘ter-mart, surprizals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and ‘detainments of all kings, princes, and people, of what ‘nation, condition, or quality soever, barratry of the ‘master and mariners, and of all other perils, losses, and ‘misfortunes, that have or shall come to the hurt, detri‘ment or damage of the said goods and merchandizes,
 ‘and ship, &c. or any part thereof.’

Perils usually insured against.

(a) As to the risks which are within the common policy,
 vid. ch. 7. § 2.

Total loss.

Every loss is either total or partial. The term total loss is understood in two different senses; natural and legal. In its natural sense, it signifies the complete and absolute destruction of the thing insured. In its legal sense it means, not merely the entire destruction or deprivation of the thing insured, but also such damage to it, though it specifically remain, as renders it of little or no value to the owner. A loss is also said to be total, if, by the happening of any of the perils or misfortunes insured against, the voyage be lost, or be not worth pursuing, and the projected adventure frustrated; or if the value of what is saved be less than the freight.

Partial loss.

To ship.

To ship.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to a total loss; for if it be not the latter, it must be the former.—Thus, if a ship, insured for a given voyage, arrive at her port of destination, and there remain 24 hours moored in safety; or, if she be insured for a term, and she survive the term; any injury which she may have sustained during the voyage, in the one case, or during the term, in the other, however great, can only amount to a partial loss (a). So, in the case of an insurance on goods; the insurer contracts that they shall arrive safe at the port of delivery; or, if not, that he will indemnify the insured. If they specifically remain, and are actually landed at the port of delivery, however damaged in the voyage, the injury will amount but to a partial loss (b), unless they be rendered of no value, and altogether useless; for then the loss is total (c).

To goods.

Average loss.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often of the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages (d).

Having premised thus much of the nature and different kinds of losses, which will be found more fully considered under the head of Abandonment (e), we now proceed to consider this branch of our subject under the following heads:

(a) Vid. Cazalet v. St. Barbe, Furneau v. Bradley, Fitzgerald v. Poole, inf. c. 13. § 2.—(b) Vid. Cocking v. Frazer, sup. 227.—(c) Vid. Burnet v. Kensington, sup. 234. and Dyson v. Rowcroft, sup. 238.—(d) Vid. inf. § 7.—(e) Inf. ch. 13. § 1.

- I. Loss by the perils of the sea ;
- II. ——— collision ;
- III. ——— fire ;
- IV. ——— capture ;
- V. ——— arrest and detention of princes ;
- VI. ——— barratry ;
- VII. ——— average contributions ;
- VIII. ——— salvage ;
- IX. ——— the death of slaves ;
- X. ——— the death of animals ;
- XI. Of fraudulent losses.

Sect. I.

Of Loss by the Perils of the Sea.

IN a large sense, all the accidents or misfortunes to which those engaged in maritime adventures are exposed, may be said to arise from the perils of the sea ; and, conformably to this idea, a loss by capture was formerly holden, in our courts, to be a loss by the perils of the sea, as much as if it were occasioned by shipwreck or tempest (a). But, in more modern times, it has been found convenient to distinguish the losses to which ships and goods at sea are liable, by the more immediate causes to which they may be particularly ascribed. In this view, losses by the perils of the sea are now restricted to such accidents or misfortunes only as proceed from mere sea-damage, that is, such as arise, ex vi divina, from stress of weather, winds and waves, from lightning and tempests, rocks and sands, &c.

What is meant by perils of the sea.

By the law of France the insurer is not held liable for losses occasioned by ignorance, or the want of care or attention, in the master or mariners, such losses not being occasioned by the perils of the sea (b), or, indeed, by any other peril mentioned in the policy.—Mr. Justice Lawrence, in the case of Tatham v. Hodgson (c), says,—“ I do not know that it was ever decided that a loss arising from

The ignorance or inattention of the master or mariners is not a peril of the sea.

(a) Vid. 2 Rol. Ab. 248. pl. 10. Comb. 56. 1 Show. 322, 3.
—(b) Pothier, h, t. n. 64.—(c) 6 T. R. 656.

the mistake of the captain, was to be deemed a loss by the perils of the sea."—In the case of Gregson v. Gilbert (a), where the loss was occasioned by the captain's mistaking Jamaica for St. Domingo, it was holden not to be a loss by the perils of the sea.

Foundering.

Stranding.

Striking against a sunken rock,
&c.

If the damage can be repaired, it is a partial loss; if not, it is total.

If a ship be not heard of within a competent time, she shall be presumed to have foundered at sea.

A loss by the perils of the sea may happen, first, by the ship's foundering at sea, and then it must, in most cases, be total in the strictest sense of the word: Secondly, by stranding, which is either accidental, as where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves; or voluntary, as where she is intentionally run on shore, either to preserve her from a worse fate, or for some fraudulent purpose. A stranding may be followed by shipwreck, in which case it becomes a total loss; or the ship may be got off in a condition to prosecute her voyage, and then the damage sustained, and the expences incurred, will be only a partial loss of the nature of a general average: Thirdly, by the ship's striking against a sunken rock, or any other thing under water, which may occasion the springing of a leak or absolute shipwreck.

If, upon a stranding or other accident happening to the ship, the damage can be repaired, and the ship rendered capable of proceeding on her voyage; this, with reference to the ship, is only a partial loss. But if a repair cannot be had at the place where the ship happens to be, either for want of materials or workmen, or where the master has no money or credit to procure any, Valin holds that this amounts to a total loss, being of opinion that such obstacles to a repair ought to be considered as a peril of the sea (b).

It often happens that ships founder at sea, and all on board perish, and this out of the view of any person who could convey any information of the misfortune to the owners. In such case, therefore, there can be no positive proof of the cause of the loss. But where no intelligence has been received of a ship within a competent time after she has sailed, it may reasonably be presumed that she foundered at sea; because a loss proceeding from any other cause, would, probably, sooner or later, have been heard of.

(a) Inf. ch. 16. §. 2.—(b) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 120.

As, where a ship was insured in 1739, from North Carolina to London, with a warranty against captures and seizures.—Four years after the ship failed, an action was brought on the policy, and in the declaration the loss was alleged to have happened “by sinking at sea,” and the evidence was, that she failed on her intended voyage, and had never afterwards been heard of.—It was insisted, for the defendant, that, as captures and seizures were excepted, it lay upon the plaintiff to prove that the loss happened in the particular manner declared on.—But Lord C. J. Lee said, that it would be unreasonable to expect certain evidence of such a loss, where every person on board is presumed to have perished: And all that can be required is, the best proof the nature of the case admits of. He therefore left it to the jury, who found for the plaintiff.

Green v. Brown, at N. P. 2 Su.
1199.

So, where a ship was insured, ‘Against any loss happening before the 30th of November 1762, free from average.’—The ship failed from Newcastle for Copenhagen (a), which is usually about ten days voyage; but was taken by a French privateer, and ransomed; and then proceeded on her voyage to Copenhagen in a bad condition. She never was heard of afterwards, though all due diligence was used to obtain intelligence of her, and several ships that failed after she did, arrived safe at Copenhagen.—Lord Mansfield told the jury, that this evidence was a sufficient ground to presume that the ship perished at sea, unless the contrary appeared. The jury accordingly found for the plaintiff.

Newby v. Reed,
at N. P. Mich.
Vac. 3 G. III.
Park 63.

S. P.

In France and Spain positive regulations have been made, to ascertain the time when the insured may call on the underwriters for the loss, on the presumption that a missing ship had perished at sea. In Spain, if a ship be not heard of for a year and a half from her departure on a

In some countries there is a limitation of time for this presumption.

(a) It is a singular omission in the note of this case, that there is no mention of the time of the ship’s sailing, nor how long after she failed the plaintiff brought his action.

voyage to or from the Indies, she is deemed lost. In France, after a year from a ship's sailing on common voyages, and two years on distant voyages, the insured may abandon and demand payment without other proof of loss (a).

In England there is no such limitation.

With us there is no time fixed by law when a missing ship shall be presumed to have foundered at sea. Every case must depend on its own circumstances; and it would be difficult to frame any certain uniform regulation for this purpose, that might not be productive of more inconvenience than advantage. Persons well acquainted with maritime affairs may form a pretty correct judgment when a ship, in any case, may be reasonably despaired of. When that time arrives, a liberal underwriter will pay his loss; and if any doubt remain, he may either demand security from the insured to refund the money, in case the ship should afterwards arrive safe, or he may trust to his remedy by action, to recover it back (b).

If a ship be driven on an enemy's coast, and there captured; this is a loss by capture, not by the perils of the sea.

Every loss must be imputed to its immediate, and not to any remote cause. Therefore, if a ship be driven by stress of weather on an enemy's coast, but not materially damaged, and she be there captured; this is not a loss by the perils of the sea, but by capture; and for this the insured may recover upon a policy against capture only (c).

So, if part of a ship's crew be, by an irresistible force, and at a critical moment, taken away from their employment, and, in consequence, the ship drive on shore, the injury, thus occasioned, is a loss by the perils of the sea.

Hodgson v. Malcolin, 2 New Rep. 336.

Two of a ship's crew who were sent on shore to cast off a rope by which she was made fast, being impressed and carried away, without being allowed to cast off the rope, the ship went on shore:—This is a loss by the perils of the sea.

Thus:—The ship Dolly, was insured 'At and from Plymouth to Sunderland.' In an action on this policy, to recover for a loss by the perils of the sea, it appeared that the ship, having arrived at Plymouth with a cargo of coals, discharged a part at Stonehouse, and took a pilot on board to carry the vessel to Sutton Pool, to discharge the remainder of her cargo, and warped her down to Stonehouse Gut, in her way thither; that the pilot then sent two of the crew on shore, in the ship's boat, to make fast another line to the shore, and to cast off their former; that these men were immediately impressed by some officers, upon which the master desired they would suffer the men to cast off the rope, and to send off the boat to the ship, being the only one belonging to her, but they would not do either, and carried away and kept the men for three quarters of an hour, and then sent them back to the ship; that in consequence of the rope not being cast off, the bows of the ship were checked, and she went ashore nearly at high water, where she grounded; that a part of her cargo being taken out into lighters, she was got off, but, in consequence of her being ashore, she was much strained and made a great deal of water.—Upon this case it was objected on the part of the defendant, that this was not a loss by the perils of the sea, but by the misconduct of the officers on shore in not permitting the rope to be cast off, and the underwriters were not answerable for the misconduct of the officers, against whom the plaintiff might bring an action.—But the court (a) held that, as the waves of the sea were the immediate cause of the ship's being driven on shore, and as no blame was imputable to those who had the management of the ship, it must be considered as a loss by the perils of the sea, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

(a) Vid. 2 Mag. 33. 177. Ord. of Louis XIV. h. t. art. 58. —(b) Vid. Tomkins v. Bernet, 1 Salk. 22.—(c) Per Lord Kenyon, at N. P. Green v. Elmſlie, Peake 212. inf. ch. 16. § 5.

But, if the master of a slave ship mistake his course, whereby a scarcity of water ensues, and a number of slaves are thrown overboard to save the rest; it will not be sufficient for the insured, in declaring for this loss, to state that, by contrary winds and currents, and the perils of the sea, the ship was retarded, and the slaves perished for want of water (b).

So, where a number of slaves perished for want of sufficient and proper food, and this failure was occasioned by extraordinary delay in the voyage, arising from bad and stormy weather; this was holden to be a loss by natural death, and not by the perils of the sea (c).

If slaves be thrown overboard, on account of a scarcity of water, occasioned by the captain's mistaking his course; this is not a loss by the perils of the sea.

So, if the slaves die for want of food, occasioned by the extraordinary length of the voyage.

(a) Mr. Justice Heath, Mr. Justice Rooke, and Mr. Justice Chambre, against the opinion of Sir James Mansfield Chief Justice.
—(b) R. Gregson v. Gilbert, inf. ch. 16. § 2.—(c) R. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656.

Riot v. Parr,
1 Esp. Rep. 414.
Ant. ch. 14. § 1.

If a ship be destroyed by worms, this is not a loss by the perils of the sea.

So, where a ship was insured from St. Bartholomew to the coast of Africa, and during her stay and trade there, and back to St. Bartholomew.—In an action upon this policy, for a total loss by the perils of the sea, the evidence was that she had been destroyed by the worms, which are well known to infest the rivers in hot climates.—But a merchant swore, that he had known many instances of loss by this species of injury, but that the underwriters had uniformly refused to pay.—Lord Kenyon who tried the cause, decided, upon this evidence, that this was not a loss by the perils of the sea; and the jury unanimously concurred with his lordship, and found a verdict for the defendant.

The insurer is not answerable for any damage to the ship, occasioned by the ordinary services
 she is engaged in.

It is singular, that among the great variety of questions which have been agitated in our courts upon almost every subject of the law of insurance, not one has yet, I believe, occurred in which the line between the damage to the rigging and furniture of the ship for which the owner, and that for which the insurer is liable, has been distinctly drawn. It is clear that the insurer is not answerable for any deterioration of the ship, her rigging or furniture, occasioned by the ordinary service in which she is engaged. As to the accidents which occasionally happen to the rigging and furniture, foreign writers have attempted to lay down the rule. They say that if a cable break by the friction of the rocks, and an anchor be lost, the insurers are not answerable. But if by some extraordinary accident, as the violence of the winds or waves, it become necessary to slip a cable, or a cable be broke, and an anchor lost, or a sail or yard be carried away, this is a loss by the perils of the sea within the policy (a).

This, however, is not quite satisfactory. The best guide, perhaps, upon this subject, is the rule which governs average contributions. According to that rule, no injury, however great, occasioned by mere sea-damage in the ordinary employment of the ship, can be the subject of a general average.—For this reason, no such injury

(b) Valin, art 29, p. 76, Polhier, h. t. n. 66. Emerig
 tom. 1. p. 393.

ought, I conceive, to be deemed a loss by the perils of the sea, within the meaning of the policy (a).

Sect. II.

Of Loss by Collision.

A SPECIES of damage to which ships at sea are often exposed, is that occasioned by collision, which is the case of one ship driving against, or running foul of, another. This may be the effect of mere accident, without blame being imputable to the master of either ship; or it may be occasioned by the negligence, unskilfulness, or misconduct of one or both of them. In general, by the marine law, an injury done by collision to a ship or her cargo, where no blame is imputable to the master of either, the loss is to be equally borne by the owners of both (b). But this rule is not adopted by the law of England. For with us, when damage of this sort has been occasioned by mere misfortune, and without fault in any one, the owners of the ship or cargo damaged must bear their own loss; this being considered as a peril of the sea (c); and in this, our law agrees with the civil law (d). The injury, thus occasioned, being a peril of the sea, is holden to be a loss within the policy (e), unless it be imputable to the misconduct of the master or mariners of the ship insured; in which case the insurer is not liable, according to the opinion of Emerigon (f). But in such case, the wilful misconduct of the master or mariners would, I conceive, amount to barratry. An action, however, would lie against the master of either ship, to whom negligence or misconduct, is imputable for the injury done to the other (g).

(a) Vid. inf. § 7. in which the subject of general average is fully considered.—(b) Laws of Oleron, art. 14, of Wisbuy, art. 26, 50, 67, 70, Ord. of Louis XIV. tit. Avaries, art. 11, Kalin thereon, Byz. Quest. Jur. Priv. lib. 4, c. 18, 19, 20, 21.—(c) Per Lord Kenyon, in Buller v. Fisher, at G. H. after Mich. 1800.—(d) ff. 9, 2, 29.—(e) Vid. Ord. de Louis XIV., tit. Avaries, art. 11. and tit. Assurance, art. 26.—(f) Vid. Emerig. tom. 1. p. 413. Vid. Pothier, h. t. p. 50, 65.—(g) Vid. Rob. Adm. Rep. 345.

Sect. II.

Of Loss by Fire.

Whether a loss by fire, imputable to the fault of the master or mariners, be a loss within the policy.

There can be no doubt but that a loss occasioned by fire which is merely accidental, and not imputable to any fault of the master or mariners, is a loss within the policy; and in many places the insurer is held to be liable, even where the fire happens by the fault of the master or mariners (a). But in France the insurer is not held answerable in such case, unless, by the policy, he be liable for barratry (b).

If a ship be burnt by order of the state where she happens to be, to prevent infection; this is a loss within the policy.

Emerigon mentions two cases on this subject—In the one, a Dutch vessel was refused admittance into the port of Majorca, and was burnt by the Spaniards, from an apprehension that she had the plague on board: There the insurer was holden to be liable, no blame being imputable to the master or mariners.—In the other, a ship, with the plague on board, of which several persons had died, was carried into the port of Marseilles, the master pretending that the deaths were occasioned by unwholesome food. The infection was communicated to the town and neighbouring country. The ship was burnt.—Here it was determined that the insurer was not liable, upon the ground that the loss was occasioned by the misconduct of the master (c). In this case barratry could not have been one of the perils inserted in the policy.

If a ship be attacked by an enemy, and the master find it impossible to defend her, Valin and Pothier hold, that he may leave her and set her on fire, to prevent her falling into the enemy's hands, provided he can preserve the lives of the crew. In such case, the insurer is liable for the loss; for the master was justified in burning the ship under such circumstances (d).

(a) Straccha, gl. 18. Targa, ch. 65. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 434.—(b) Pothier, h. t. n. 53. Emerig. ut sup.—(c) Emerig. ut sup.—(d) Pothier, h. t. n. 53, 65. Valin, art. 26. h. t.

SECT. IV.

Of Loss by Capture.

CAPTURE is when a ship is subdued and taken by an enemy in open war, or by way of reprisals, or by a pirate, and with intent to deprive the owner of it.—Capture may be with intent to possess both ship and cargo, or only to seize the goods of the enemy, or contraband goods, which are on board. The former is a capture of the ship in the proper sense of the word; the latter is only an arrest and detention, without any design to deprive the owner of it.—Capture is deemed lawful, when made by a declared enemy, lawfully commissioned, and according to the laws of war; and unlawful, when it is against the rules established by the law of nations.

What shall be deemed a capture.

But for every loss occasioned by capture, whether lawful or unlawful, the insurer is liable (a), the words of the policy being sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of capture to which ships at sea can ever be exposed.

Every capture, whether lawful or unlawful, is a loss within the policy.

And in every case of capture the insurer is answerable, to the extent of the sum insured, for the loss actually sustained. This may be either total, as where the ship or goods insured are not recovered again; or partial, as where the ship is recaptured or restored before abandonment; in which case the insurer is bound to pay the salvage, and any other necessary expence which the insured may have been put to for the recovery of his property (b).

And the insurers are answerable, to the extent of the sum insured, for the loss actually sustained.

And the insurer is liable for a loss by capture, whether the property in the thing insured be changed by the capture or not. For a ship is lost by capture, though she be never condemned, or even carried into any port or fleet of the enemy. It can never, therefore, be a question between the insurer and the insured, whether the capture be lawful or not, or whether the property be changed by condemnation or by being carried into an enemy's port. A capture by a pirate, or under a commission, when there is no war, does not change the property; and yet, as between the insurer and the insured, the effect is the same, as in the case of a capture by an enemy in open and declared hostilities: For whatever rule ought to be observed in questions of this sort, as between the owner and the recaptor, or his vendee, it can in no way affect the case, as between the insured and the insurer.

And they are liable whether the property be changed or not by the capture.

(a) Le Guidon, ch. 7. n. 1. Casaregis, disc. 1. n. 118. Roccus, n. 41. 54. 55, 64, 66. Valin, art. 26, h. t. Pothier, h. t. n. 54.—(b) As to salvage, vid. inf. § 8.

Therefore the effect of capture and recapture, in divesting or re-vesting the property, can make no question, except in insurances without interest.

Therefore, as to the length of possession by an enemy, which is deemed sufficient to divest the property out of the original owner, or the effect of a re-capture in re-vesting it,—these are now matters which can never come directly in question between the insured and the insurer. They never could have come in question, in any case of insurance upon real interest; because, according to the above principles, they never could have varied the case. They could only have had their origin in gaming insurances, in which there could be no average or benefit of salvage, and in which, therefore, it was always necessary to set up a total loss, for the purpose of the wager. In gaming insurances, when there was a re-capture, the claim, as for a total loss, seems formerly to have involved the question, whether the property in the thing insured had, by the capture, or any proceeding founded on it, been divested out of the original owner, or not, before the re-capture.

And yet, where a ship is insured à l'interest or à l'interêt, a capture, however illegal, and though the ship be retaken, is a total loss.

And yet the following cases will shew that, upon insurances, 'interest or no interest,' it has been repeatedly determined that if the ship be taken, it is a total loss, however illegal the capture may be, and though the ship be retaken and restored to the owner.

It is observable, however, that the policies in the first, second, and fourth of these cases, though they contained the words 'interest or no interest,' were evidently insurances upon real interest.—Lord Mansfield, indeed, in his observations observations on the first of them (a), says, 'that it was the case of a wager policy; and the ship having been once in fact taken, the event had happened against which the insurance was made, though she was afterwards recovered.'—But his lordship must have been misled by the words, 'interest or no interest,' to suppose this to have been a wager policy; for it is plain, from the judgment, that the court considered the plaintiff as interested in the ship.

In the first of these cases, a ship, insured 'interest or no interest,' was taken by a Swedish pirate, and after continuing in his possession for nine days, was re-taken by an English man of war, and carried into Havwich, but not till after an action was brought on the policy:—The court held that though the ship was re-taken, yet the plaintiff received a damage, for his voyage was interrupted; that the question was, not whether the plaintiff should have his ship again, and should not lose his property, but what damage he had sustained.

The next was, where a privateer was insured 'for three months, interest or no interest, free from average, and without benefit of salvage.'—The ship was taken by a French ship of war, within the three months; her guns and 117 of her men taken out of her, and carried into France. But after she had remained in possession of the enemy for three whole days, and before she was carried into any port of the enemy, she was retaken by an English privateer, and carried into Lisbon, before the expiration of the three months; so that by the capture she was prevented from finishing her cruise. It appeared that the insured was interested to more than the amount of the sum insured; and that the master of the privateer had obtained a decree, in the court of admiralty of Gibraltar, that the ship should be restored to the owners, on payment of one third part for salvage.—The court determined that, though the ship was never carried infra præsidia hostium, this was not a De Paiba v. Ludlow, 1 Com. 361.

The capture of a ship insured, 'interest or no interest,' is a total loss, though it be illegal, and the ship recaptured.

Pond v. King, 1 Will. 191.

A privateer insured for a three months cruise, 'interest or no interest,' is taken, and after three days is retaken; yet it is a total loss.

(a) Vid. Lord Mansfield's observations on De Paiba v. Ludlow, 2 Bur. 695.

partial, but a total, loss to the insured.—Lord C. J. Jee, in delivering the opinion of the court, said ;—“ Although, by the civil law, it may not, perhaps, be adjudged a total loss, yet the rules of that law are not to govern us, but we must give our judgment according to the common law of England, upon this agreement between the parties, whose intention appears and must guide us. By the civil law, there must be a total loss, to entitle the insured to recover; but the policy, in this case, extends to captures and other accidents.—The meaning of the parties here is plain : The insured paid his premium in consideration of the insurer's undertaking that the ship should cruise safely for three months; the jury have found that she was disabled from prosecuting her cruise for three months. The insurance is to be understood for the cruise of three months, and in common sense it cannot be otherwise; so that, as soon as the voyage is broken or interrupted, the cruise is at an end. Safety during the three months is what is meant; but it appears that the ship was taken and detained within that time, and that the plaintiff was hindered in his cruise; and this, by our law, is a total loss to the plaintiff. I have avoided saying any thing on the question, whether this was a prize or not, as having never been carried infra præsidia hostium, because we are all of opinion that this is a total loss.”

Dean v. Decker,
at N. P. 250.
1250.

Goods are insured ‘interest’ or ‘no interest.’ The ship is taken and carried into the enemy's port; and after eight days cut out, and restored to the owner, on payment of salvage; yet the insured shall recover as for a total loss.

In the third of these cases, the insurance was, ‘on goods, interest or no interest, at and from Jamaica to Bristol.’—The ship in her passage was taken by a Spanish privateer, and carried into a port in Spain, kept there eight days, and then cut out by an English ship.—The plaintiff insisted that this insurance, though on goods, was to be considered as a wager on the bottom of the ship, and therefore, he was entitled to recover as for a total loss.—The defendant contended that, by the stat. 13 G. II. c. 4. the ship and cargo were to be restored to the owners upon paying salvage (a); and that this was only an average loss, and the plaintiff could only recover in the case of a total loss.—Lord C. J. Lee held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover: For this was a wager upon a total loss, and here had happened one, by the ship's being carried into port, and there detained eight days; that where the policy is, 'interest or no interest,' the provisions of the act, in cases of valued policies, could not take place; that the act does not declare that the property is not gone by such a capture, but only provides for restoring the ship to the former owner; but, that it might be otherwise, where the ship was re-captured before she was carried infra presidia; or in case of goods actually on board, and upon a valued policy.

(a) Vid. inf. § 8. how salvage is at present regulated.

The last of these cases was where an insurance was made on a ship 'interest or no interest, free of average, &c. from Jamaica to Hull.'—In her voyage she was taken by a French privateer and carried into Hamburg; and after being twelve days in the hands of the enemy, was retaken by an English ship, and brought to London, where she was adjudged to be restored to the owner, paying salvage.—The owner sold the ship and paid the salvage.—In an action on the policy, this was holden to be a loss of the voyage; and a verdict was given accordingly.

But though no question can now arise, between the insured and the insurer, as to the effect of a capture, or re-capture, in divesting or revesting the property; yet, as it may sometimes be of importance, in matters of insurance, to know how the law stands on this subject, it may not be improper, here, to enquire, shortly, when a capture shall be deemed to transfer the property to an enemy, and what shall be the effect of a re-capture in re-vesting it in the original owner.

Voet on the pandects, and several authors he refers to, maintain with great earnestness, per solam occupationem, dominium prædæ hostibus acquiri. (a). But the general opinion seems to be, that by the law of nations, the pro-

Whitehead v Bance, at N. P. B. R. Mich. 1749. Park 77.

A captured ship insured 'interest or no interest,' is retaken after 12 days, and sold by the owner to pay the salvage:—This is a total loss.

The effect of a capture and re-capture in divesting or revesting property.

Opinions of different authors on this subject.

(a) Voet, lib. 49, tit. 15, vol. 2, p. 1155.

perty of things captured in war is changed when all reasonable hope of recovering them is gone; and, with respect to things moveable, all reasonable hope of recovering them is presumed to be gone when they are brought within the protection of the enemy's fortress (a).

But what custody of ships or effects taken at sea, shall be equivalent to a placing of things captured on land infra præsidia, is a subject of much doubt and dispute. Grotius says, that ships or goods taken at sea become the property of the captors, when they are brought into the enemy's harbours, or to the place where his whole fleet is stationed; for then all hopes of recovering them may be said to vanish. But, he adds, that by the law of nations, as introduced among European states in more modern times, things are considered as captured, when they have been 24 hours in the power of the enemy (b).

Bynkershoek, and several writers whom he follows, absolutely deny this pretended rule of the law of nations, and insist on the rule of the Roman law, that the prize must be carried infra præsidia, before it can become the property of the captor; and by præsidia he understands the camps, the ports, the towns, and the fleets, of the enemy (c).

Other writers have drawn other lines, by arbitrary distinctions, partly from policy, to prevent too easy a disposition to neutrals, and partly from equity, to extend the jus postliminii, or the right of reclaiming what has been recovered from the enemy, in favour of the original owner. No wonder, therefore, that there is so much uncertainty, and such a variety of notions among them about fixing a positive boundary by the mere force of reason, where the subject matter is arbitrary, and not the subject of reason alone. (a).

(a) Ceterum in hac belli questione placuit gentibus, ut cepisse rem is intelligatur qui ita detinet ut recuperandi spem probabilem alter amiserit, aut ut res persecutionem effugerit. Hec autem in rebus mobilibus ita procedit, ut capta dicantur ubi intra fines, id est præsidia hostium, perducta fuerint. Grot. de jur. bel. ac pac. lib. 3. c. 6. § 3. Vid. March Rep. 110.—(b) Cui consequens esse videtur, ut in mari navis et res aliæ capte censeantur tum demum cum in navalia aut portus, aut ad eum locum ubi tota classis se tenet, perductæ sunt.—Nem tunc desperari incipit recuperatio. Sed recentiori jure gentium inter Europæos populos introductum videmus, ut talia capta censeantur ubi per horas viginti quatuor in potestate hostium fuerint. Grot. ubi sup.—Vid. Consolato del Mare, c. 283, 287. Roccus, not. 66.—(c) Vid. Bynk. jur. pub. lib. 1, c. 4.

In our courts of admiralty it has always been holden that, by the marine law of England, independently of the statute which commands restitution, and fixes the rate of salvage, the property is not changed in favour of a vendee or recaptor, so as to bar the original owner, till there has been a regular sentence of condemnation: And in the reign of King Charles II. a solemn judgment was given upon this point; and restitution of a ship taken by a privateer was decreed, after she had been fourteen weeks in the enemy's possession, because she had not been condemned (b). The same doctrine has, in several instances prevailed in our courts of common law (c). In one case it was holden that nine days possession by the captor, and in another, that four years possession, and several voyages performed, will not change the property, without a sentence of condemnation (d).

How considered by the law of England.

When there has been a capture, whether legal or not, and the ship has been recaptured or restored before abandonment, the insurer is bound to defray all necessary expences which the insured has been put to for the recovery of his property. He is therefore liable for a sum of money paid by the insured to the captors, as a compromise made bonâ fide, to prevent the ship from being condemned as prize.

The insurer is liable for all fair charges occasioned
by the capture.

(a) Vid. Lord Mansfield's judgment in Goss v. Withers, 2 Bur. 695. — (b) Cited by Lord Mansfield as a case reported to him by Sir Geo. Lee. Vid. Goss v. Withers, 2 Bur. 695. — (c) Affieveda v. Cambridge 10 Mod. 79. — (d) — v. Sands, 10 Mod. 79. See Lord Mansfield's observations on these cases, 2 Bur. 695. The cases themselves are so defectively reported, that I have not thought them worthy of a more particular notice, Herons v. Rucker, at N. P. 1 Bl.

313.

A ship, warranted neutral &c, is captured as an enemy's ship, and the owners, after an interlocutory decree against them, agree to a compromise:—
'This being done pro rata, the insurer is liable for the sum paid under such compromise.

Thus:—The Dutch ship Tyd and her cargo were insured 'At and from St. Eustatia to Amsterdam, warranted
'Dutch property, and not laden in any French port in the 'West Indies.'—In May 1758 the ship took in a cargo of sugars, indigo, and other French commodities, partly out of barks, partly from the shore. On the 18th of June she sailed on her voyage, and on the 27th was taken by an English privateer, and carried into Portsmouth, proceedings in the court of admiralty were begun in August, and after many delays and citations from court to court, an interlocutory order was pronounced, in February 1759, for the contumacy of the claimants in not specifying what part of the cargo was taken from the shore, what from barks; and it was decreed that the goods should be presumed French property. There was an appeal to the lords commissioners of prizes, but as many causes stood before it, the market very high, and the cargo in part perishable, the agent of the owners agreed with the captors to give them 800*l.* and costs, to obtain the reversal of the sentence. This was obtained by consent, and it was decreed that there was a sufficient cause of seizure, in order to give costs to the captors, and restitution was decreed to the owners. After the ship's arrival at Amsterdam, the chamber of insurances there settled the average of the loss and expences occasioned by the capture, detention, and litigation; and for this the action was brought.—Lord Mansfield said;—"The first question is, whether this was a just capture (a). Both sentences are out of the case, being done and undone by consent. The capture was unjust. The pretence was, that part of this cargo was put on board off St. Eustatia, out of barks supposed to come from the French islands, and not loaded immediately from the shore. It is now a settled point, that it is the same thing as if they had been landed on the Dutch shore, and put on board afterwards, in which case there is no colour for seizure. The

If the produce of an enemy's country be brought from thence in barks and put on board
a neutral ship;
this will be the same as if the goods had been shipped from the shore in a neutral port. But a neutral ship,

(a) This became a question, on account of the warranty that the ship and cargo were Dutch property; for if the capture had been just, it would have falsified the warranty.

rule

rule is, that if a neutral ship trade to a French colony, with all the privileges of a French ship, and is thus adopted and naturalized, it must be looked upon as a French ship, and is liable to be taken. Not so, if she have only French produce on board, without taking it in at a French port; for it may be purchased of neutrals.—The second question is, whether the owners have acted bonâ fide and uprightly, as men acting for themselves, and upon a reasonable footing; so as to make the expences of this compromise a loss to be borne by the insurers. The judge of the admiralty's order to specify was illegal, contrary to the marine law, and to the act of parliament which is declaratory of the marine law: Because, if they had specified, it would be of no consequence, according to the rule before-mentioned. Yet the captors were in possession of a sentence, though an unjust one. And a court of appeal cannot, or seldom does, give costs or damages which have accrued subsequent to the original sentence; for those damages arise from the fault of the judge, not of the parties. Under all these circumstances, therefore, the owners did wisely to offer a compromise. The cargo was worth 12,000 l.; the appeal was hazardous; the delay certain. The Dutch deputy in England negotiated the compromise. The chamber of commerce at Amsterdam ratified it, and thought it reasonable. Had the whole sentence been reversed, the costs must have fallen heavy on the owners. I therefore think the insurers liable to answer this average loss, which was submitted to, to avoid a total one." The jury found for the plaintiff.

Formerly it was a common practice to ransom British ships, when captured by an enemy, by delivering to the enemy what was called a ransom bill, which secured to the captor the price agreed upon, and operated as a bill of sale of the ship and cargo to the original owners, and as a protection to the ship against other cruizers of the enemy during the remainder of her voyage. A hostage was delivered to the captor to secure to him the punctual payment of the stipulated sum.

trading to an enemy's colony, with all the advantages of an enemy's ship, is liable to capture.

Of ransoming captured ships.

ACTIONS at common law were formerly maintained on ransom bills.

This ransom bill, independently of the hostage, was considered as a contract of the law of nations, and obligatory upon the owners as well as upon the captain and hostage who signed it (a); and actions have been often brought upon them in our courts of common law. And where the ship or goods were insured, the amount of the ransom was usually taken to be the measure of the demand of the insured upon the underwriters in respect of the capture (b).

Antken v. Fisher,
Doug. 648, 9.

But now an alien enemy cannot sue for any right acquired by actual war.

But at length, in an action on a ransom bill, which came before the court of King's Bench in Trinity Term 1782, it was contended on the part of the defendant, that as questions on ransom bills arise out of matter of prize, and are to be decided therefore by the jus belli, such questions are not triable in any court of common law, but belong exclusively to the courts of prize.—The judges of that court differing in opinion upon this question, they gave judgment for the plaintiff pro forma, and the cause being removed by writ of error to the Exchequer Chamber, it was there unanimously determined, that an alien enemy cannot, by the municipal law of this country, sue for the recovery of a right claimed to be acquired by him in actual war, and the judgment of the Court of King's Bench was reversed.

And now, by Stat. 22 G. III. c. 35, it is declared unlawful to ransom any British ship taken by the enemy.

But this practice of ransoming ships captured by the enemy being found to operate more to the disadvantage than for the benefit of this country, it was at length thought proper to prohibit it altogether. And therefore by Stat. 22 G. III. c. 25. § 1. it is enacted, 'That it shall not be lawful for any of his Majesty's subjects to ransom, or to enter into any contract or agreement for ransoming, any ship or vessel belonging to any of his Majesty's subjects, or any merchandize or goods on board the same, which shall be captured by the subjects of any state at war with his Majesty, or by any person committing hostilities against his Majesty's subjects.' And by § 2. 'All contracts and agreements which shall be entered into, and all bills, notes, and other securities, which shall be given by any person or persons for ransom of any such ship or vessel, or of any merchandise or goods on board the same, shall be absolutely void in law, and of no effect whatever.' And, by § 3, a penalty of 500 l. is given to the informer, for every offence against the act. This statute has put an end to all questions on the law of ransoms.—And yet it is singular that though this act has no clause of limitation, as to its duration, and is therefore perpetual, the same provisions are re-enacted in the same words, by each of the two last prize acts, 33 G. III. c. 66, § 37, 38, 39, and the 43 G. III. c. 160, § 34, 35, 36; and in this last act, § 34, the words, "Unless in the case of extreme necessity, to be allowed by the court of admiralty," are added to the first clause; and yet both these acts are only to continue during the respective wars for which they were made.

(a) Si quid fœduli hosti promiserint, est in eo fides servanda. Cic. Vid. Burhamahai, part. 4. ch. 4. Vattel, liv. 3, ch. 16, § 233. Grot. lib. 3, ch. 21, § 1.—(b) Vid. Ricord v. Bettenham, 3 Bur. 1734, 1 Bl. 563. Cornu v. Blackburne, Doug. 619.

' shall

It often happens that a recaptured ship is in a state to prosecute her original voyage; and, in that case, it is the interest of the recaptors, as well as of the other parties concerned, that she should be permitted to do so. The last prize act (a) has therefore very properly provided, 'That if a ship be retaken before she has been carried into an enemy's port, it shall be lawful for her, if the recaptors consent thereto, to prosecute her voyage; and it shall not be necessary for the recaptors to proceed to adjudication till six months after the recapture, or till the return of the ship to the port from whence she sailed; and the master, owners, or agents, with the consent of the recaptors may dispose of their cargoes before adjudication; And in case the vessel shall not return to the port from whence she sailed, or the recaptors shall have had no opportunity of proceeding regularly to adjudication within the six months, on account of the absence of the said vessel, the court of admiralty shall, at the instance of the recaptors, decree restitution to the former owners, they paying salvage, upon such evidence as to the court shall, under all the circumstances of the case, appear reasonable; the expence of such proceeding not to exceed fourteen pounds.'

If a ship be recaptured before she is carried into an enemy's port, she may, with the consent of the recaptors, prosecute her original voyage.

And the recaptors shall not be obliged to proceed to adjudication, till after six months, or the return of the ship.

(a) Stat. 43 G. III. c. 160. § 41.

Sect. V.

Of Loss by Detention of Princes.

BY the terms of the policy the insurer is answerable for all loss occasioned by "arrests or detentions of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever." Under these words, which are nearly the same in the policies of all the other maritime countries of Europe, the insurers are liable for all losses occasioned by arrests or detention of the ship or goods insured, by the authority of any prince, or public body claiming to exercise sovereign power, under what pretence soever.

What shall be deemed an arrest and detention of princes.

As if the sovereign of the country to which a ship belongs, or any other sovereign, not at war with him, from motives of necessity, not of hostility, arrest the ship either singly, or together with others in the same port or harbour; this is a detention of princes (a).

Difference between capture and arrest of princes.

There is an obvious difference between capture and arrest of princes: The object of the one is prize; that of the other detention, with a design to restore the ship or goods detained, or to pay the value to the owner. And though neither of these should be done, still it must be considered as an arrest of princes, because the character of any action depends on the original design with which it was done.

If a ship be detained, upon a war breaking out; this is capture, not arrest.

When a ship is detained in a port after a declaration of war, or the issuing of letters of reprisal, against the country or state to which she belongs; this more resembles a capture than a detention, and gives the insured an immediate right to abandon, as for a loss by capture, even though no condemnation be pronounced, and though the ship be afterwards restored (b).

(a) Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 7, art. 6, and ch. 9, art. 6, and 13; Valin, tom. 2, p. 416. — (b) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 56.

An arrest of princes may be at sea as well as in a port or harbour, provided it be done from public necessity, not with a view to plunder. Roccus (a) mentions the case of a Genoese ship laden with corn, which was seized at sea by the Venetian galleys, and carried into Corfu, where there was a famine at the time, and there sold and paid for.—The insured instituted a suit in the Rota of Genoa against the insurers, and insisted that this was a capture for which they might abandon. The insurers answered that this was merely a detention of princes, the object of which was not to capture the ship, but to purchase the corn which the necessity of the public required. Diversio facta fuit, non ad capiendam navim, sed ob publicam utilitatem grani consequendi causâ. Licuit frumenta accipere, soluto pretio.—This was held to be a good defence.

And yet, if a neutral ship be arrested at sea, and carried into a port belonging to one of the belligerent powers, under pretence that she belongs to the enemy, or that she is laden with enemy's goods; this must be considered as a capture, because it is done as an act of hostility; and the ship's being afterwards restored, will not change that which was originally a capture into a detention of princes (b).—But in the case of Saloucci v. Johnson, already particularly mentioned (c), the court of King's Bench determined, that the refusal of a neutral to submit to a search by a Spanish ship of war, and resisting with force, was no forfeiture of the ship's neutrality; and that the ship being arrested and carried into Spain for this resistance, the insured was intitled to recover against the underwriters as for "an improper detention." And though it has since been determined, both in the court of King's Bench and the court of admiralty, that resisting a search is a lawful cause of capture and confiscation (d), yet the above case of Saloucci v. Johnson, may nevertheless, I conceive, be considered as an authority to prove that if a neutral ship be unlawfully arrested and

It may be at sea as well as in port.

Seizing a corn ship at sea, for the relief of a place suffering under a famine, is only an arrest of princes, not a capture.

But if a neutral be taken at sea, under pretence that she is an enemy, this is a capture.

So, if it be under pretence that she committed an offence against the law of nations.

(a) h. t. n. 60.—(b) Emerig. tom. 1. p. 337.—
(c) Sup. 387.—(d) Sup. 389.

detained by a belligerent cruiser for any pretended offence against the law of nations, this would be a detention of princes.

But if a ship be seized for navigating against the laws of a foreign state, this is not a detention of princes.

But if a ship misconduct herself; as by navigating against the laws of a foreign country, which she is bound to observe, or for not paying customs, &c. and thereby subject herself to seizure or confiscation; this shall not be deemed a loss by restraint or detention of princes (a); though, perhaps, it may amount to barratry of the master (b).

Embargo.

The most frequent cause of detention is an embargo, which is a proclamation or order of state, usually issued in time of war, or threatened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all of the ports of such state until further order. An embargo laid on ships and merchandize in the ports of this kingdom by virtue of the king's proclamation, is strictly legal, when the proclamation does not contravene the ancient laws, or tend to establish new ones; but only to enforce the execution of such laws as are already in being, in such manner as the King shall judge necessary (c).

This, whether legal or not, is a detention within the policy.

But it is needless, in this place, to enlarge upon the right of our own sovereign, or that of any other, to lay embargoes. For whether an embargo be legally or illegally laid, the injury to the owner, by the detention of his ship or goods, is the same; and the insurer is equally liable for the loss occasioned by it.

The word people in the policy means a people, or nation, not a mob.

By the word people in the policy is not to be understood any promiscuous or lawless rabble that may be guilty of attacking or detaining a ship: The following case will shew that it means a people; that is, a nation in its collective and political capacity.

Nesbitt v. Livingston, 4 T. R. 33.

A ship is forcibly seized by a tumultuous rabble:—This is a loss by pirates, but not by detention of a people.

A cargo of corn and coals was insured from Loughall to Sligo, in Ireland.—The first count of the declaration, in describing the loss, stated that the ship, by stress of weather, was forced into Elly Harbaur; where she was, with force

(a) Per Lord Commissioner Hutchins, 2 Vern. 176.—
(b) Vid. Salucci v. Johnson, sup. 387.—(c) 3 Inst. 162.
4 Mod. 177. 179. 1 Bl. Com. 279.

and violence, attacked, boarded, arrested, and detained, by people to the plaintiff unknown; by reason whereof the corn was wholly lost. In the second count it was stated that the ship being in Elly Harbour, was with force and violence attacked and boarded, seized and taken, by certain pirates, to the plaintiff unknown, whereby the corn was wholly lost.—The policy was in the usual form.—It appeared that the ship was forced by stress of weather into Elly Harbour; and there happening to be a scarcity of corn there at the time, the people came on board the ship in a tumultuous manner, and would not leave her till they had forced the captain to sell all the corn at a certain price, except 10 tons which was spoiled by the stranding and thrown overboard. The ship afterwards arrived at her destined port, with the coals. The court determined that this was a capture by pirates, and not a loss within the meaning of the words arrests, &c. of kings, princes, and people.—Lord Kenyon said the word people meant the ruling power of the country. Mr. Justice Buller said it meant the supreme power of the country, whatever that might be. This, he said, appeared by another part of the policy; for where the wrongful acts of individuals are mentioned, they are described by the names of pirates, rogues, thieves. Then, having specified all the individuals against whose acts the insurance is made, it specifies those occasioned by the acts of kings, princes, and people of what nation, condition, or quality soever; which must apply to “nations,” in their collective capacity (a).

By the French law, where a ship has been arrested in time of peace, as there is reason to hope, in such case,

An arrest by the authority of the British government is a loss within the policy.

(a) Roccus, (h. t. n. 54.), in the following passage, seems to interpret the usual words of the policy in a larger sense than that to which they are here restricted:—Si merces capta a potestate, seu iudice justitiam administrante in illo loco, aut a populo aut ab aliâ quacunque personâ, per vim, absque pretii solutione, tenentur assureatores solvere estimationem dominis mercium, factâ prius per dominos mercium cessione ad beneficium assureatorum, pro recuperandis illis mercibus, vel pretio ipsorum a capientibus.

that

that she will soon be set at liberty again, such an arrest is not reputed the species of loss that will at once justify an immediate abandonment; but the owners must wait till the expiration of a certain time, regulated by the ordinance of the marine, which, for an arrest in Europe, is six months from the time notice of such arrest is given to the underwriters (a).—This regulation is founded on a sacrifice of the interests of commerce to the pleasure of the government. In England the rule is more just; for there, from the moment of a capture or arrest, the owners are considered as having lost their power over the ship and cargo, and are deprived of the free disposal of them; because, in the opinion of the merchant, his right of disposal being suspended or rendered uncertain, is equivalent to a total deprivation: It is therefore unreasonable to oblige the insured to wait the event of a capture, detention, or embargo (b).

A suspension of the power of disposal is a total loss.

Therefore, if a British ship be arrested or seized by the authority of the British government, from state necessity; this shall be a detention within the meaning of the policy, for which the insurer is liable (c).

Green v. Young,
at N. P. 2 Lord
Ray. 640. Salk.
444.

A British ship is seized at Jamaica, and converted into a fire-ship by the government there: It seems the insurer is liable.

If a ship, insured at and from a port be arrested in that port, this is an arrest within the policy.

As, where a ship was insured, ‘from her arrival at — in Jamaica, and during her voyage to London:’—An embargo was laid on the ship by the government, who afterwards seized her, and converted her into a fire ship, and offered to pay the owners.—The question was whether this would excuse the insurers? Lord C. J. Holt seemed to be of opinion that it would not; and that this was within the words detention of princes, &c.: But he gave no absolute opinion, because the cause was referred.

So, if a ship be insured “at and from” a given port, a detention by public authority, in that port, is a detention within the words of the policy. For the words of the policy being large enough to cover this risk, nothing but some express law or usage to the contrary can exempt the insurer (a).

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 56.—(b) Vid. Lord Mansfield’s judgment in Griff v. Withers, 2 Bur. 683. inf. ch. 13. § 1.—
(c) Vid. Emerig. tom. 1. p. 541. Ord. de la mar. h. t. 52^s and Valin, tom. 2. p. 134.

Thus:—An insurance was made on three ships, the Adelaide, the Adèle, and the Victor, their stores, &c.: Upon two of them, ‘At and from L’Orient ;’ and upon the third, ‘At, and from, and after, her arrival ‘at L’Orient ;’ and upon all of them, ‘To all ports, seas, and ‘places whatsoever beyond, and on this side, the Cape ‘of Good Hope and Cape Horn, on the southern whale ‘and seal fishery and trade, and until their arrival back ‘at L’Orient.’—An action being brought on this policy, the loss was stated in the declaration to have happened by the ships, their stores, and provisions, being, by the authority of certain persons exercising the powers of government in France, at Port Louis with respect to one, and at L’Orient with respect to the two others, arrested and restrained from further prosecuting their voyages.—

The

Rotch v. Ed’s,
6 T. R. 425,
sup. 44.

A neutral ship and stores are insured at and from an enemy’s port, and an embargo is there laid on by the enemy. This is an arrest of princes.—And if the embargo continue, the insured may abandon and recover as for a total loss.

(a) Some doubt seems to have been entertained on this point. Roccus, n. 65. says, “Regis et principis factum connumeratur inter casus fortuitos ; ideo, si rex et princeps retineant navem oneratam frumenta asportare ad locum destinatum, tenentur asscuratores.” This passage, and that which precedes it, plainly shew that the author meant a detention by the power under whose authority the ship was to sail. Le Guidon, c. 7. § 1. treating of abandonment, says, that the insured may abandon, “quand il advient du tout ou de partie, ou bien avarie qui excède ou endommage la moitié de la marchandise, quand il y a prise d’amis ou d’ennemis, arrêt de prince, &c.” The ord. of 1684. h. t. art. 52. contains these words. “Si le vaisseau étoit arrêté en vertu de nos ordres dans un des ports de notre royaume, avant le voyage commencé, les assurés ne pourront, à cause de l’arrêt, faire l’abandon de leurs effets aux assureurs.” Vain, commenting upon this article, (vol. 2. p. 134). distinguishes the arrest of a foreign prince, from that made by order of the King of France ; he also distinguishes an arrest in the port of loading, from an arrest in any other port of France, where the ship happens to put in ; and he says that, only in the latter case, an arrest by the King is a ground to abandon. But Pothier, (h. t. n. 59). and after him, Emerigon (vol. 1. p. 541.) reject

The Adelaide sailed from L'Orient on the voyage insured, but was obliged to put back by stress of weather, into Port Louis, and on the 5th of February 1793, while she lay there, the Adèle and Victor were preparing for their voyages, and before the necessary passports and clearances could be obtained, an embargo was laid on all vessels in those ports. The Adelaide was brought back to L'Orient, the perishable stores of all three ships were sold, and the ships themselves, with the rest of the stores, remained at L'Orient under the embargo, which still continued on all ships destined for long voyages. The Adèle and Victor had entered outward upon their respective voyages, when the embargo came; and that alone prevented them from sailing. Notice of abandonment was given to the underwriters on the 27th of February 1793, and a total loss claimed, and the same repeated in August following. The plaintiff, who then resided in England, was a subject of the United States of America, and formerly resided several reject these distinctions, and maintain that the words, "avant le voyage commencé," mean before the risk is commenced; and that if the risk be commenced before the arrest, the insured may abandon, upon an arrest even in the port of loading. Le Guidon; however, (ch. 9. art. 6). contains these words: "Si le prince arrête le navire, comme s'il s'en vouloit servir; s'il avoit affaire de portion ou de toute la marchandise; s'il ne veut permettre aux navires de sortir qu'en flotte, ou redoublement d'équipage, ou s'il prévoyoit à plus grand danger les arrestans pour quelque temps, l'assureur n'est en aucune indemnité quand telle chose avient dedans le même port, pour ce que ce sont des dangers de la terre, procédans du vouloir du prince."—Upon this passage of Le Guidon, Valin (ubi sup.) observes, that whatever may be the King's motive for stopping the departure of a ship, the insurer has no right to abandon, but must wait till the king has withdrawn his orders, and it may be considered as one of the extraordinary and unforeseen events by which a voyage may be prolonged beyond its usual time. Lord Mansfield, in Goss v. Withers, 2 Bur. 696. seems to have adopted the doctrine as laid down by Roccus, and followed by Pothier and Emerigon; namely; that the insured may abandon in the case of a mere arrest, or an embargo by any prince. Vid. infra, ch. 13.

years

years in London, but for some years previous to the insurances in question, had dwelt at L'Orient, and was jointly concerned in the Southern whale fishery with Mr. Berard a native of France, resident at L'Orient, and whose interest was separately insured.—On the trial of the cause a special case, stating the above facts, was reserved for the opinion of the court, and it was contended on the part of the underwriters,—1st, That an embargo at the loading port to which the ship belonged, and where the insured owed a temporary allegiance to the governing power, was not a risk within the meaning of the policy, because like sea-worthiness, it is a condition necessarily implied in contracts of insurance, that the ship may legally sail from the loading port. 2dly, That there was no loss in regard to the subject-matter of the insurance, which is on the ship, &c. 3dly, That the plaintiff had no right to abandon as for a total loss, under the particular circumstances of this case.—The court, however, determined in favour of the plaintiff on all these points.—As to the first, they held, that the terms of the policy were sufficiently large to extend to this case; and that it was incumbent on the defendant to have shewn some case in which it was otherwise decided; but all the authorities, both English and foreign, were in favour of the plaintiff. That the plaintiff was not an alien enemy, but a native of America, then resident in England, and therefore under no disability to sue in this case, and the consequence of allowing this objection, would be to render it illegal to insure the property of a neutral, in an enemy's port. As to the second point, the court held that, as the insurance was not only on the ship, but on the stores, provisions, and fishing tackle, which were lost to the plaintiff; and as the voyage was lost in consequence of the detention of the ships, this was a loss within the policy, and a very different case from that of Robertson v. Ever (a), to which it had been compared.—Upon the last point, the court was of opinion, that the plaintiff had as much right to abandon in this case, as in the case of a capture by an enemy; and for this the doctrine of Lord Mansfield in Goss v. Withers (a) was much relied upon.

(a) 1 T. R. 127. inf. c. 16. § 5.

A seizure, after a cessation of hostilities, is an arrest of princes.

Spencer v. Franco, at N. P. December 1736, Beawes 4th edit. p. 316. (b).

An English ship is seized by the Spaniards, and converted by them into a ship of war: But it appearing that this was after a cessation of arms, and preliminary articles of peace signed, and the ship having been restored; this was held not to be a capture, but only a detention of princes.

If a ship be seized after a cessation of arms and preliminary articles of peace are signed, this shall not be deemed a capture, but only an arrest of princes.

As, where the plaintiff had caused himself to be insured 'On the Prince Frederick from Vera Cruz to London, interest or no interest, free of average, and without benefit of salvage.'—The ship was afterwards seized by order of the Viceroy of Mexico, and the Spaniards, having taken out the South Sea Company's arms, and made several alterations in her, turned her into a ship of war, and sent her as commodore with a squadron of men of war to the Havannah, there being a war at that time between England and Spain; and Gibraltar was actually besieged by the Spaniards.—In an action on the policy (c), the defendants proved the signing of the preliminary articles of peace before the seizure of the ship, and therefore insisted that this seizure did not alter the property, and consequently the defendants were not liable: For if the property were not altered, this insurance, made by the plaintiff without interest, could not bind, as nothing came within the policy but a total loss: And though there be those general words, "restraint, or detainment of princes."—Lord Hardwicke C. J. declared that a war might begin without an actual declaration or proclamation, as in this case, by laying siege to Gibraltar; that as a war might begin by hostilities only, so it might end by a cessation of arms; and these preliminary articles being signed before the seizure of the ship, and there being a cessation of arms, he thought the taking of the ship afterwards not to be a taking by enemies, unless the jury took the capture to begin from the time the South Sea arms were taken out,

(a) 2 Bur. 583. inf. c. 13. § 2.—(b) This case, which is found in the 4th edition of Beawes but not in the 5th, is so imperfectly reported that it cannot be much relied upon as an authority: Yet, being cited by Lord Mansfield in the case of Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Bur. 1211, I thought it ought not to be passed unnoticed here.—(c) The plaintiff, it may be presumed, declared only upon a loss by capture.

which

which was before the preliminaries; that supposing the ship not taken by enemies, whether the detention for near a year was, in this sort of policy, viz interest or no interest, a detention within the policy; or whether, in such policies, the insurers are ever liable, but in case of a total loss; and if so, the ship being afterwards restored, he directed the jury to find for the defendants, which they accordingly did.

Sect. VI.

Of Loss by Barratry.

BARRATRY, which is derived from the Italian verb barratrare to cheat (a), may be defined to be any act committed by the master or mariners, for an unlawful or fraudulent purpose, contrary to their duty to their owners, and whereby the owners sustain an injury: As, by running away with the ship, wilfully carrying her out of the course of the voyage prescribed by the owners, sinking or deserting her, embezzling the cargo, smuggling, or any other offence whereby the ship or cargo may be subjected to arrest, detention, loss, or forfeiture. Barratry, in short, comprehends every fraud that may be committed by the master or mariners, to the detriment of the owners; and therefore, where the breach assigned in the declaration on a policy was, the loss of the ship, "by the fraud and negligence of the master," it was determined that this was a sufficient averment of a loss by barratry (b).

Barratry defined.

At Amsterdam, Hamburg, Midalburgh, and some other maritime towns, insurers are, by positive law, made responsible for the barratry of the master and mariners (c). At Rotterdam the owners of ships are prohibited from insuring against the barratry of the master whom they themselves appoint. But they are permitted to insure against his neglect, against the barratry of the sailors, and of such master as may succeed to the command in foreign parts without their knowledge, upon the decease or absence of the master originally appointed (a).

Whether insurance against barratry ought in all cases to be permitted.

(a) Its meaning, according to Dufresne, (Glos. verb. Barratria) is, "fraus et dolus, qui fit in contractibus et venditionibus."

—(b) R. Knight v. Cambridge, 1 Str. 581. 2 Lord Ray. 1349, inf. ch. 16, § 2.—(c) 2 Mag. 73, 130, 215.

Lord Mansfield seems to have thought it extraordinary that barratry should ever have crept into insurances, and still more that it should have continued in them so long; "thus," says his lordship, "making the underwriter become insurer of the conduct of the captain whom he does not appoint, and cannot dismiss, to the owners who can do either" (b).

Roccus (c) holds that the insurer cannot be made liable for barratry, if the insured be the owner of the ship; but if he only charter the ship, he may insure against barratry; because, in that case, the owner of the ship appoints the master. But where the owner of the goods appoints the master, it is holden that he cannot be insured against the barratry of such master (d).

In France the insurer was formerly answerable, ipso jure, for the barratry of the master (e). But, by the ordinance of the marine (f), this liability is confined to cases, where the policy expressly includes barratry; and Emerigon (g) even insists that the owner of the ship cannot be insured against barratry of the master, because he is himself answerable, according to the rule of the Roman law (h), for the conduct of the master whom he employs; and if the owner be himself answerable to third persons for the barratry of the master, he cannot, as insured, throw this burthen on the insurer who would have an immediate remedy against him, as owner, to recover back the same loss; a circuitry of action which would be absurd.

(a) Vid. Roccus, n. 27, Emerig. tom. 1, p. 370 —

(b) 1 T. R. 330. — (c) h. t. n. 44. — (d) Quando navarchus positus est à domino mercium, tunc affecuratus sibi debet imputare quod talem præpositum elegerit et affecurator non tenetur. Gosaregis, dis. 10, n. 14; dis. 1. n. 75. — (e) Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 5, art. 6, ch. 9, art. 8, 12. — (f) h. t. art. 28. — (g) Vol. 1, p. 369. — (h) Omnia facta magistri debet præstare qui eum præposuit. ff. l. 1. § 5, de exercit. act. Ex delicto cujusvis eorum qui navis naviganda causâ in nave sunt datur actio in exercitorem. id. § 2.

Upon the same principle Emerigon also holds that if the captain be commissioned to dispose of an adventure on board, the insurer of such adventure shall not be answerable for the loss of it, occasioned by the fault of the captain; for this would be, to make the insurer answerable to the insured for the faults of his own agent (a).

But the objections to the policy of permitting insurances against barratry, in the case of the owner of the ship, however well founded, do not apply to the case of an insurance of goods in a general ship, which carries the goods of every man who chuses to put them on board, or of a chartered ship, hired to carry the goods of the affreighter; for, in either case, the owner of the goods does not appoint the master, nor has he any control over him or the ship. It is probable that cases like this first gave birth to the practice of insuring against barratry; and that this, in process of time, was indiscriminately introduced into all policies.

But even in the case of a particular ship freighted entirely by a single person, it may in general be presumed that if the insurer do not know the master, or at least his character, it is his own fault, as every policy specifies the master; but then it is generally provided that any other person, at the election of the insured, may go as master; and by permitting this clause to stand in the policy, the insurer waves all personal knowledge of the master, and therefore no objection can fairly be made of the want of such knowledge (b).

And though barratry cannot properly be called a peril of the sea, because it does not arise ex marine tempestatis discrimine, yet it is a risk, and a very great one, incident to sea voyages; because merchants are obliged to confide.

(a) Emerig. tom. 1, p. 370. — (b) Vid. Roccus, h. t. n. 27. Cowp. 153. Vid. sup. 312.

their ships and merchandize to the care of mariners, who may sometimes so far forget their duty, as to betray the important trust reposed in them. Unless, therefore, the merchant could be protected by insuring against this risk, few men of small capitals would expose themselves to it. For this reason the law, with us, permits even the owner of the ship to be insured against the misconduct of the captain and crew, though they are his own agents, and the persons of his own choice.

The captain may be insured against the barratry of the sailors.

If the captain be insured, no agreement on the part of the insurers can make them liable for barratry committed by himself (a); but they may be liable, in such case, for the barratry of the sailors, in which he has no part (b).

Still, however, it must be owned that cases sometimes occur which tempt one to think that it might, perhaps, be the wisest policy to impose some restraint upon unqualified insurances by owners of ships, against this species of risk. It would at least have the effect of making them more circumspect in the choice of the persons to whom they confide so great a charge.

What shall be deemed barratry.

Valin (c), Pothier (d), and Emerigon (e), adopting the doctrine of Le Guidon (f), hold that barratry comprehends every fault, either of the master or mariners, by which a loss is occasioned, whether arising from fraud, negligence, unskilfulness, or mere imprudence; and in this sense it seems to be understood in the French ordinance of the marine (g).

But with us, no fault of the master or mariners amounts to barratry, unless it proceed from a fraudulent purpose in the master or mariners at the time (h).

A deviation not proceeding from fraud is not barratry.

Therefore if the master, from ignorance, unskilfulness, or from any motive which is not fraudulent, depart from the proper course of the voyage; this will be a deviation which may avoid the policy, but it will not amount to barratry.

(a) Le Guidon, ch. 15, art. 4; Valin, h. t. art. 27, p. 75; Pothier, h. t. n. 65.—(b) Emerig. tom. 1, p. 371.—(c) On art. 28, h. t. tom. 1, p. 79.—(d) h. t. n. 65.—(e) tom. 2, p. 366.—(f) Ch. 5, art. 6, ch. 9, art. 1, 8.—(g) h. t. art. 28.—(h) Non omnis navarci culpa est barataria, sed solum tunc ea dicitur, quando committitur cum præexistenti ejus machinatione et dolo præordinato ad casum. Casus regis, dis. 1, n. 77,

Thus:—Goods were insured from London to Jamaica, and it appeared that the captain's instructions were to proceed immediately to Jamaica: But after the ship had cleared the Channel, she was carried by currents and other causes, out of her reckoning, till she was found to be between the Grand Canary and Teneriffe. From this situation her direct course to Jamaica was to the south-west, instead of which, the captain bore up from Santa Cruz, to the north-west about 30 miles, where she came to an anchor. There, an embargo was laid upon her; soon after which, news arrived of war having been declared between Spain and Great Britain, and the ship and cargo were seized and condemned as prize.—In an action on the policy, the declaration contained two counts; one for a loss by capture, the other for a loss by barratry. And it was contended on the part of the plaintiff, that he was necessarily intitled to recover on one count or the other. On the first, if there was no deviation; or, admitting that the ship's going to Santa Cruz instead of proceeding to Jamaica, after the captain knew with certainty where he was, was a deviation, still it was a wilful deviation by the captain, against his instructions, merely to procure a temporary refreshment, and no benefit to the owners, and therefore an act of barratry.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, said, that it could not be barratry, without a fraudulent purpose in the captain at the time; and with that direction he left it to the jury, who found, “that the captain's going to Santa Cruz was a deviation, and “was owing either to ignorance or something else, but “that it was not fraudulent;” and they accordingly found for the defendants.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court were clearly of opinion that there must be fraud to constitute barratry; and as the jury had expressly negatived fraud, there could be no barratry.—Mr. Justice Larrence said he knew of no case in which it is said that the act of the captain is barratry, merely because it is against the interest of the owners; it must be done with a criminal intent: That, in this case, the jury having nega-Phyn. v. Roy.

Ex. Assur.
7 T.R. 505.

In a voyage from London to Jamaica, the captain loses his reckoning; and when he discovers his situation, instead of steering directly to Jamaica, he bears up for an island out of that course:—This is a deviation, but being without any fraudulent intention, is not barratry.

tived fraud, had negatived criminality in the captain; and therefore this was not a barratrous deviation.

Whether barratry may be committed by the seamen without the participation, or against the will, of the captain.

In France, if by the policy the insured be protected against the barratry of the master, the underwriters are answerable for the misconduct of the mariners also; because the word master (patron) comprehends all the persons on board who are in the ship's pay (a). Our policies are more explicit, and distinctly specify barratry of the master and mariners. I should conceive, therefore, that with us, as in France, the mariners may commit barratry, without the concurrence of the master, or against his will. In the following case, however, Lord C. J. Lee, at nisi prius held, that a deviation to which the master was compelled by a daring act of violence and disobedience on the part of the seamen, did not amount to barratry, because the ship was not actually run away with in order to defraud the owners.

Elton v. Bragden, 2 Str. 1264. Sup. 212

A letter of marque has orders, in case she takes a prize, to send it home, and proceed on her voyage; but the master was compelled by the sailors to return back with the prize:—This is not barratry.

That was the case of a letter of marque, insured for a voyage 'from Bristol to Newfoundland.'—She sailed with express orders that, if she should take any prize, she should nevertheless proceed on her voyage, and that some hands should be put on board the prize, and sent with it to Bristol.—A prize was taken in the course of the voyage, and the captain ordered some of the crew to carry the prize to Bristol, while he proceeded on his voyage: But the crew opposed him, and insisted on his going back, though he acquainted them with his orders; and he was forced to submit, and on his return his own ship was taken.—The underwriters insisted that this was a deviation which discharged them. But the court and jury held, that this was occasioned by the force upon the master, which he could not resist; and that it therefore fell within the excuse of necessity, which had always been allowed. 'The plaintiff's counsel would have made barratry of it; but lord chief justice Lee thought that it did not amount to barratry, as the ship was not run away with in order to defraud the owners: Neither was it a case of wilful deviation, but of deviation occasioned by the force upon the master which he could not resist; and therefore excused by the necessity. The insurers were therefore held to be answerable, and the plaintiff had a verdict as for a loss by capture (a).

(a) Les assureurs ne répondent pas des méfaits des mariners a moins que par la police ils ne soient chargés de la baratterie du patron. Le mot patron comprend ici tous ceux qui sont aux gages du navire. Emerig. t. 1. p. 381, 2. Vid. Valin, tom. 2. p. 3.

The learned judge who tried this cause, and who was in general a master of all the learning of his time on the subject of insurance, seems to have thought that nothing short of running away with the ship, with intent to defraud the owners, amounted to barratry. What the seamen did in that case was but one degree short of such a crime. In the following case, which we have already had occasion to mention, the conduct of the master was held to be barratry, though certainly much more venial than that of the sailors in the above case.

A ship was chartered for a voyage from Liverpool to the Bahamas and back, and on her return from the West Indies, letters of marque were taken on board, merely to entice seamen to enter, but without the necessary documents to give them validity, and without any intention of cruising in quest of prizes; and it was a part of his written instructions, before he failed, to proceed to Liverpool with all expedition. A few days after the ship failed, however, the captain, with the concurrence of the majority of the seamen, determined to cruise for prizes; and he soon fell in with an American whom he plundered and

Moss v. Byron,
6 T. R. 379.
Sup. 283.

The master, without the proper authority, and contrary to his orders, cruises in quest of prize, this is barratry, though done for the benefit of the owners.

(a) In an appeal from the East Indies, in a cause of De Frije v. Stephens at the Cockpit, 1st July 1800, Sir R. P. Arden, then Master of the Rolls, observing upon this case of Elton v. Brogden, said, he thought it must be ill reported in Strange; for, upon the facts stated, there could be no doubt but that the mariners had committed barratry, and that he was therefore inclined to think, as Lord Mansfield appeared to have done in commenting on this case in that of Valljo v. Wheeler, that the policy must have been special, probably not including barratry of the mariners.

afterwards discharged. He then cruised for some days out of the course of the voyage, and captured a ship of the enemy which he sent to Bermudas, where he followed her himself, and there libelled her as prize in the court of admiralty, in the name of himself and his owners. But during his stay there his ship was stranded, and the cargo lost. He directed that the cruising should not be mentioned in the log-book.—In an action to recover as for a loss by barratry, it was contended on the part of the underwriters, that this could not be barratry, in as much as the act of the captain, however reprehensible in other respects, was done with a view to benefit, not to prejudice, his owners.—But the court held this to be barratry; and that the stopping and plundering the American ship was of itself an act of barratry in the master, independent of his taking the prize, this being contrary to his duty to his owners, and to their prejudice; because, by the charter-party, they had stipulated that the ship should sail directly to Liverpool, and they were therefore liable for any damage that might happen in consequence of any wilful deviation.—Mr. Justice Lawrence, in delivering his opinion, said, “It has been holden that whatever is done, by the captain, to defeat or delay the performance of the voyage, is barratry in him, it being to the prejudice of his owners. And though he might conceive that what he did was for the benefit of the owners; yet, if he acted contrary to his duty to them, it was barratry.”

Any illegal act, done by the master, without the authority of the owners, and to their detriment, is barratry, though done with a view of promoting their interest.

In the following case, which was determined in the Court of King's Bench upon great consideration, and in which Lord Ellenborough, in a very able judgment, took a masterly view of all the learning and authorities on this subject, it was determined that any illegal act done by the master, without the authority of the owners, and to their detriment, is barratry, though it be not done with intent to injure them, or to benefit himself, and even though it be done with a view of promoting their interest.

Earl v. Rowen, 8 East 126.

The master of an African slave ship, sails to an enemy's settlement on the coast

The ship Annabella was insured from Liverpool upon an African voyage, and, in an action on the policy to recover a loss by barratry, it appeared that the master, who was also supercargo, upon his arrival at Cape Coast Castle, a British settlement on the coast of Africa, began to

to trade there; but, after a couple of days, receiving intelligence that he could barter his goods for slaves more advantageously and expeditiously at Elmina, a Dutch fort about seven miles to windward, he proceeded thither and there exchanged his goods, consisting, amongst other things, of muskets and gunpowder, for slaves, Holland being at that time at war with Great Britain, and he having letters of marque on board against the French and Dutch. After taking on board a number of slaves, the master, who was then on shore at Elmina, hearing that an English frigate was in sight, sent a note on board the Annabella, directing her to sail immediately to Cape Coast; "to prevent mischief," as he expressed himself; but, in her way thither, she was pursued and seized by the English frigate, and sent to Jamaica, where she was condemned as prize, for having traded with the enemy (a). It further appeared, that it had been usual to keep up a trading intercourse between the English and Dutch settlements on this part of the coast, even in times of war between the mother countries, and that the master's object in going to Elmina was to complete his cargo as cheaply and expeditiously as he could; that when the ship was about to go to Elmina the surgeon asked the master if there was no impropriety in going thither, to which he answered that they should be soon off again, and nobody would know it; and it also appeared that, besides his usual wages, he had a commission on the purchase and sales, which he received at the end of each voyage.—The Court determined that for the purpose of trading to more advantage than he could at a British settlement. For this his ship is seized by a British frigate, and confiscated:—This trading was barratry.

(a) As to the illegality of trading with the enemy, vid. sup. ch. 3. § 4. And with respect to the legality of capture and confiscation for trading with the enemy, without the king's licence, see the case of the Hoop, 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 196, with the authorities there cited, and the case of the Olin, id. 248; see also 2 Rob. Adm. Rep. 166, and the case of the Cosmopolite, 4 Rob. Adm. Rep. 10. And a trading by the subjects of an ally in the war, has been holden illegal, and a ground of seizure and confiscation in our Courts of Admiralty. See the case of the Nayade, 4 Rob. Adm. Rep. 251. See 5 Rob. Adm. Rep. 254, 256.

this trading with the enemy by the master, without the authority of the owners, though intended principally for their benefit, being in contravention of his duty to them, and subjecting their property to confiscation, was barratry.—Lord Ellenborough concludes his very able judgment by laying it down as clear law “That a breach of duty by the master, in respect to his owners, with a fraudulent or criminal intent, or ex maleficio, is barratry; that it makes no difference whether this act of the master be induced by motives of advantage to himself, malice to the owner, or a disregard of those laws which it was his duty to obey; and that it is not for him to judge or suppose, in cases not intrusted to his discretion, that he is not breaking the trust reposed in him, when he endeavours to advance the interest of his owners by means which the law forbids.”

Barratry can only be committed against the owners, and therefore not with their consent.

Barratry can only be committed by the master and mariners by some act contrary to their duty, in the relation in which they stand to the owners of the ship. It is therefore an offence against them, and consequently an owner himself cannot commit barratry. He may, by his fraudulent conduct, make himself liable to the owner of the goods on board, but not for barratry. Neither can barratry be committed against the owner, with his consent; for though he may be liable for any loss or damage occasioned by the misconduct of the master to which he consents, yet this is not barratry. Nothing is more clear than that a man can never set up as a crime an act done by his own direction or consent. These points will be found fully established in the two following cases.

Stamway Brown,
2 Str. 1173.

A ship is engaged to carry goods straight to Marseilles; but instead of going thither direct, she goes first to Genoa and Leghorn: This being done by the authority of the owner, is not barratry.

In the first of these, it appeared that a ship being advertized to go to Marseilles, goods were shipped on board her, and the master signed a bill of lading, whereby he undertook to go straight to that place, and the goods were insured, ‘from Falmouth,’ (where they were to be taken on board), ‘to Marseilles.’ Before the ship departed from the port of London, another advertisement was published for goods to Genoa, Leghorn, and Naples, and the plaintiff’s

plaintiff's agent was told that it was intended to go to those ports first, and then come back to Marseilles; but he insisted that his bargain was to go directly to Marseilles; and he would not consent to let her pass by Marseilles or alter his insurance.—The ship, however, did pass by Marseilles; and after delivering her cargo at the other ports, set out on her return to Marseilles with the plaintiff's goods; but, in her voyage thither, was blown up in an engagement with a Spanish ship of war. The plaintiff declared as for a loss by the barratry of the master.—Lord C. J. Lee told the jury that this voyage, being against the express agreement to proceed straight to Marseilles, seemed to be more than a common deviation, as it was a formed design to deceive the plaintiff; and compared it to the case of sailing out of port without paying the duties, whereby the ship was subjected to forfeiture, which had been holden to be barratry. — The jury, after staying out some time, returned and asked the Chief Justice, whether, if the master was to have no benefit to himself by passing by Marseilles, and went only to the other places first, for the benefit of his owners, that would be barratry; and the Chief Justice answering, No, they found for the defendant.—On a motion for a new trial, the court after argument, were unanimously of opinion that the verdict was right: For the master had acted consistently with his duty to his owners, and the plaintiff's agent knew of the intended alteration, before the goods were put on board, and might have refused to ship them, or have altered the insurance; and to make it barratry, there must be something of a criminal nature, as well as a breach of the contract, but here, the breach being assigned only on the barratry, was not supported by the evidence.—Mr. Justice Lawrence, in delivering his judgment in the case of Phyn v. Roy. Ex. Assur. (a) says that, in this case, of which he had a manuscript note, Lord C. J. Lee, in defining barratry, said, "Barratry must be some breach of trust in the master, ex maleficio."

(a) 7 T. R. 508. See some further extracts of this note, and also of Mr. Ford's note of this case of Stamina v. Brown, 8 East 135-6.

Nutt v. Bourdieu,
1 T.R. 323.

After bills of lading are delivered to the owners of goods, the captain signs new ones, changing the destination of the ship; and the goods are disposed of for the use of the owner of the ship, and in fraud of the owner of the goods:—This being done with the concurrence of the owner, is not barratry.

The other was the case of an insurance effected on behalf of Hague, before he became bankrupt, on goods on board the Rachette from London to Rochelle. It appeared that the master, by the instigation and direction of Le Grand, the owner of the ship, went with the ship and cargo to Bourdeaux, instead of Rochelle, where the cargo was sold by the agent of Le Grand: That a petition was presented by the insured to the admiralty of Guienne, stating that Le Grand, partner in a house at Rochelle, being in London with his ship, and in want of a cargo to return home, applied to Hague, who agreed to supply him with goods, which were loaded on board the ship, for account of Le Grand; that as Hague did not know the house of Le Grand, it was agreed between him, Le Grand, and the captain, that the bills of lading should not be delivered to Le Grand but at Rochelle, after he should have paid the amount to the agent of Hague, in good bills, and, in default, that the goods should be received by Hague's agent for his account free from freight &c.; that the captain accordingly delivered bills of lading to Hague, who forwarded them, together with the contract, to his agent at Rochelle, with orders to receive the goods on the arrival of the ship, or deliver them to Le Grand if he should fulfil his agreement; that, upon the ship's arrival at the harbour of Rochelle, Le Grand went on shore, got secretly into the town, where, having consulted with his partners how to elude the precautions taken by Hague, returned on board and got the captain fraudulently to sign other bills of lading, by which he reserved to himself the liberty of putting into Rochelle or Bourdeaux, and by means of the false bills of lading, and by the contrivance of Le Grand, the goods were there put into the hands of Le Grand's agent; that Hague's agent on hearing of this, applied to the house of Le Grand, who gave him bills for the whole amount, but which were afterwards dishonoured; whereupon the agent attached the cargo in the hands of the several persons who who held it; that the house of Le Grand having delivered a false account to their creditors, a release was granted them from all attachments and executions, confirmed by the parliament of Paris, with an injunction to all persons arresting their goods to restore them; that, in consequence of this petition, the court of admiralty at Bordeaux decreed that the captain was guilty of barratry, for having signed false bills of lading, in order to change the voyage, and carry away the goods, for which they condemned him to the galleys for life, and declared Le Grand to be an accomplice in the said barratry of the master, and guilty of robbery in causing the ship to be brought into Bordeaux, and condemned him to the galleys for five years, and lastly, condemned the captain and Le Grand to pay the value of the goods, with the charges, &c.—The court were clearly of opinion that this could not be barratry, and that the plaintiff ought not to recover.—Lord Mansfield said,—“The sentence of the French court of admiralty, which declared the master and owners to have been guilty of barratry, is entirely out of the question: For, though it was a most righteous judgment, yet it was no part of the consideration of that court, what was meant by barratry in an English policy. Their idea of barratry was manifestly different from the construction put upon that word in our own courts; for they had found the owner guilty of barratry, which was entirely repugnant to every definition of barratry which had ever been laid down in an English court of justice. The point to be considered is, whether barratry, in the sense in which it is used in our policies, can be committed against any but the owners of the ship. It is clear beyond contradiction that it could not; for barratry is something contrary to the duty of the master and mariners, the very terms of which imply that it must be in the relation in which they stand to the owners of the ship. An owner, therefore, cannot commit barratry. He may make himself liable by his fraudulent conduct to the owner of the goods, but not as for barratry. And, besides, barratry cannot be committed against the owner with his consent: For though the owner may become liable

liable for a civil loss, by the misbehaviour of the captain, if he consented, yet that is not barratry. Barratry must partake of something criminal, and must be committed against the owner, by the master or mariners."

If the same person be both owner and master he cannot commit barratry.

If the master of the ship be also the owner, he cannot commit barratry, because he cannot commit a fraud against himself. And even where he has mortgaged the ship, and the legal title is in another, and he has only the equity of redemption, yet he is still so far the owner, that he cannot commit barratry (a).

But a deviation without the knowledge of a general freighter, though with the consent of the owners, is barratry.

It is not, indeed, against the person possessed of the mere legal title to a ship, that barratry may be committed; it may be committed against a general freighter, in respect of his temporary power over that ship during a given voyage; and a deviation for an illegal purpose, without his knowledge or consent, will be barratry, though it be with the consent of the original owner.

Fallejo v. Wheeler, Cowp. 143.

As where goods were insured in the common form, 'From London to Seville, with liberty to touch at any ports or places, &c.'—In an action on the policy, the loss was alleged different ways in the declaration; first, that the ship by storms and perils of the sea, was forced to go to Dartmouth to be repaired; and that afterwards a further loss happened by storms, &c.; secondly, that it happened by storms, &c. in the voyage generally; and thirdly, by the barratry of the master.—At the trial it appeared, that the ship was put up as a general ship from London to Seville, and was let to freight by one Willes to Darwin (b); that it is the course for vessels going on this voyage, to stop at some port in the west of Cornwall, to take in provisions; that this ship having taken her cargo on board, sailed from London to the Downs, and while she lay there, all the other ships bound to the westward bore away, but she staid till the night after, and then sailed to Guernsey, which was out of the course of the voyage; that the captain went there for his own convenience, to take in brandy and wine on his own account, after which he intended to proceed to Cornwall; that the night after the ship quitted Guernsey she sprung a leak, which obliged her to put into Dartmouth; that when she was refitted, she sailed again, and proceeded for Helford in Cornwall, where it was always intended she should stop and take in provisions, but in her way thither, she received further damage, and at her arrival was totally-incapable of proceeding on the voyage; and that the goods insured were much damaged.—It was attempted, on the part of the defendant, to prove that the voyage to Guernsey was on account of Willes, the owner of the ship, and that the goods taken on board there were his property: But this evidence went little farther than information and belief, except that, when the ship arrived at Helford, the wine was delivered into his cellar.—Mr. Justice Asburys, who tried the cause, told the jury that, if the going to Guernsey was without the knowledge of Darwin, it was barratry; and they ought to find for the plaintiff; but if done with his knowledge, then it was not barratry: And if they should be of opinion that it was without the knowledge of Darwin, then, he desired them to say, whether they thought it was with the knowledge of Willes or not (a). The jury found for the plaintiff, and said they thought the going to Guernsey was without the knowledge of Darwin, whom they looked upon to be the owner, but they thought it was with the knowledge of Willes.—Upon a motion for a new trial, two questions were made: First, Whether the conduct of the master, in going to Guernsey, for

(a) Semb. per Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, Lewin v. Suafso, Post. Di. vol. 1, p. 147.—(b) Mr. Cowper's report of this case states Darwin to have chartered the ship to Brown, his captain. Mr. Justice Buller in 1 T. R. 330; says, that the error should be corrected by stating that the ship was chartered by Brown to Darwin, and not by Darwin to Brown. But it appears by the subsequent part of the report, that Willes chartered the ship to Darwin.

(a) There seems to be some error in this part of the report. The first part of the direction of the learned judge takes it for granted that Darwin was the owner. If so, it could not be material to enquire whether the deviation was with, or without, the knowledge of Willes. It would seem, from the finding of the jury, that it had been left to them to say which of the two was the owner.

the purpose, and under the circumstances above stated, was barratry : Supposing this to be barratry, then secondly ; whether, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, the loss must not have happened during the continuance of the barratry, or have been occasioned immediately by the act of barratry : Here the goods were not seized for smuggling, nor did the loss happen till after the act of barratry.—The court, after two arguments, were unanimously of opinion that this was barratry.—They said, that if a ship be let out generally to freight, the freighter is owner for that voyage ; but if there be only a covenant to carry goods, the owner of the ship would have the direction of her, and the hiring of the master and mariners ; that though Willes was originally the owner, and not being the insured here, every thing relating to him might be laid out of the case, and that the jury, therefore, did right in considering Darwin as owner pro hac vice ; that Darwin being the freighter and owner of the goods on board, any fraud committed on the owner, must be committed on him ; that the master had agreed to go on a voyage from London to Seville, and Darwin trusted he would set out immediately, instead of which, he went on an iniquitous scheme, totally distinct from the purpose of the voyage to Seville, which was a cheat and a fraud on Darwin, and was therefore barratry ; that barratry is not confined to the running away with the ship, but comprehends every species of fraud, knavery, or criminal conduct in the master, by which the owners or freighters are injured ; that whether the loss happened in the act of barratry, that is, during the fraudulent voyage, or after, was immaterial, because the voyage was equally altered even though there was no other iniquitous intent ; independently of this, the judges seemed to think that the loss, in the present case, was sustained in consequence of the alteration in the voyage ; that the moment the ship was carried from her right course, it was barratry, and the loss happened in consequence ; but that, supposing the loss to have happened afterward, the insured, if not protected against the barratry of the master, would have lost his insurance by the fraud of the master ; for it was clearly a deviation, and he could have no remedy remedy against the underwriters for a loss in consequence of a deviation.

Hence it would seem that, if barratry be once committed, every subsequent loss or damage may be ascribed to that cause; and that the underwriters are liable for it, as for a loss by barratry.

Though it is a maxim in law that fraud shall never be presumed, but must be strictly proved; and it is a rule, in questions of insurance, that he who charges barratry, must substantiate it by conclusive evidence (a); yet, in the following case, it was determined that proof of the master's having carried the ship out of the regular course of the voyage, for fraudulent purposes of his own, is prima facie, sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover; without shewing, negatively, that he was not the owner, or that any other person was the owner, or that this was not done with the owner's consent.

Thus:—Goods were insured on board the Live Oak, Joseph Rati master, 'At and from Jamaica to New Orleans.'—In an action on the policy, there were two counts in the declaration; the first alledging a loss by the barratry of the master; the second by the perils of the sea.—Upon the trial, it appeared, That the ship was put up as a general ship at Jamaica, that she sailed on the voyage insured in May 1783; that the plaintiff, amongst others, shipped the goods in question, and in June following, arrived in the mouth of the Mississippi, which leads up to New Orleans, in Spanish America, at the distance of 35 leagues; that when the captain had got thus far, he dropped anchor, and went in his boat up the river to New Orleans; and, on his return, without carrying the ship to her port of destination, stood away for the Havannah, after which he was never heard of; that he had a private adventure of negroes of his own on board, which there was reason for supposing he intended to dispose of at New Orleans; but that, finding it difficult to do

It is sufficient to prove that the master committed barratry, without shewing negatively, that he was not owner, &c.

Ross v. Hunter,
4 T. R. 33.

Goods are insured from Jamaica to New Orleans, and the master anchors in the mouth of the Mississippi, goes up to that place in his boat for a fraudulent purpose, and on his return, stands away for the Havannah:—Proof of these facts is sufficient evidence of barratry, without shewing negatively that he was not owner or general freighter.

(a) Sparatare crimen nunquam est presumendum sed conclusivè probandum. Casa-regis, disc. 1, n. 60; disc. 225, n. 99; disc. 226, n. 6. Vid. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 372.

fo, on account of an interdiction by the Spanish government against the importation of them there, he went to the Havannab in quest of a market for them.—The defendants insisted that, upon the first count, there was no evidence to shew that the captain was guilty of barratry; for non constat that he was not himself the owner or general freighter of the ship; or if not, that he had acted contrary to the directions of the owner in going out of the original course; and that, as to the second count, there was a clear deviation which discharged the underwriters.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, was of opinion that barratry was sufficiently proved, and that therefore the plaintiff was intitled to recover on the first count, and the jury found accordingly.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court were clearly of opinion that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict. The ship was a general ship, of which Rati was proved to be captain, which is prima facie evidence that he was not owner. There was no proof of his being owner; and if that fact were necessary to constitute the defence of the underwriter, the affirmative proof lay upon him. For the same reason, if Rati had been general freighter, that ought to have been proved by the defendant.—Mr. Justice Buller also held, that the very dropping of the anchor in the mouth of the Mississipi, being with a fraudulent view, was an act of barratry.

Even dropping anchor with a fraudulent view is an act of barratry.

Though the words 'in any lawful trade' be inserted in a policy, the insurer is liable, if the captain commit barratry by smuggling.

If a ship be insured for a term, in any lawful trade, and barratry be one of the risks mentioned in the policy, the underwriters are answerable for the barratry of the master by smuggling; for lawful trade in the policy means the trade in which the ship shall be employed by the owners, and not any unlawful commerce in which the captain may be engaged without their concurrence.

Blankley v. Ifinstuney, 3 T. R.
279.

As, where a ship was insured for twelvemonths, 'in any lawful trade, to commence on her sailing from Sunderland.'—The declaration alledged, that the ship sailed in a lawful trade from Sunderland, and afterwards sailed on a voyage from Ostend to Sunderland, but put into the port of Shields, where the master, in a barratrous and fraudulent manner, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, did fraudulently and barratrously, import from Ostend,

Offend, a quantity of smuggled goods, whereby the ship became forfeited, and was seized.—To this the defendant demurred, and insisted that, as the insurance only extended to losses which the ship might sustain in a lawful trade; the underwriter could not be liable for any loss occasioned by an unlawful trade, whether it proceeded from the act of the master or owner; and that the barratry insured against was such as might happen in a lawful trade, as by deserting, sinking, or running away with, the ship.—But the court determined that if the owner conducted himself with propriety, he was entitled to be indemnified against all the perils insured against in the policy; and that the words “any lawful trade” in the policy meant the trade in which the ship was employed by the owners.

Every loss must appear to be a direct and immediate consequence of the cause to which it is ascribed by the insured. We have seen, however, in the case of Vallejo v. Wheeler (a), that whether the loss happen during the act of barratry, or after it, is immaterial. Yet, if a loss do not happen within the time prescribed by the policy for the duration of the risk, the insurer will not be liable for it, though it be the undoubted consequence of the barratry.

The insurer will not be liable for a loss if the loss happens during the voyage, though barratry was committed before.

As where a ship was insured from Hamburgh to London; and it appeared that, in the course of the voyage, the master committed barratry, by smuggling on his own account, on the English coast; that on the 1st of September 1785, the ship arrived at her moorings in the Thames, where she remained in safety till the 27th, when she was seized for the smuggling, and the owners, upon their petition, had leave to compound for a sum of money.—Upon this case it was determined that though, by the excise laws, the forfeiture attaches the moment the offence is committed, and the ship may be seized at any time afterwards, and that the barratry was committed during the voyage; yet, that the underwriters were not liable for this loss; for the law of insurance would be left unsettled, if the liability of the insurers were to be continued for any other time than that prescribed by the policy.

Lockyer v. Offley,
1 T. R. 252;
Sup. 174.

How barratry shall be punished.

The offence of barratry, so mischievous in itself, and so injurious to commerce, is punishable as a public offence, according to the degree of guilt of the offender, by every commercial state in Europe.

in France.

In France, any fraud practised by the master or mariners, with or without the privity of the owners, and frauds committed by the owners themselves, are, as we have already seen, accounted barratry, and are punished with exemplary severity. It appears by the case of Nutt v. Bourdieu (a), that the captain of a ship was sentenced to the galleys for life for signing false bills of lading, in order to change the voyage and carry away the goods; and that the owner, who was convicted of being an accomplice in this crime, and of robbery in causing the ship to be carried to a wrong port, and converting the goods on board to his own use, was sentenced to the galleys for five years.

How offences of this nature are punished by the laws of this country, will be shewn in the last section of the present chapter, where the subject of fraudulent losses in general will be considered.

SECT. VII.

Of Loss by Average Contributions.

THE subject of average is a branch of marine law which does not necessarily make a part of the law of insurance: But as insurers, by the general words of most policies, are liable to indemnify the insured against those contributions which are properly denominated general average, this subject must often incidentally occur in the consideration of partial losses. It will therefore be necessary, in this place, to take a cursory view of the doctrine of averages, and of the regulations by which they are generally understood to be governed.

(a) 1 T. R. 323, sup. 450.

Average (a) is a term used in commerce to signify a contribution made by the owners of the ship, freight, and goods on board, in proportion to their respective interests, towards any particular loss or expence sustained for the general safety of the ship and cargo; to the end that the particular loser may not be a greater sufferer than the owners of the ship and the other owners of goods on board. Thus, where the goods of a particular merchant are thrown overboard in a storm, to save the ship from sinking, which may be lawfully done (b); or where the masts, cables, anchors, or other furniture of the ship are cut away or destroyed, for the preservation of the whole (c); or money or goods are given as a composition to pirates to save the rest; or damage is sustained in defending the ship against an enemy or pirate; or a ransom, (when that is legal), is agreed to be paid to an enemy or pirate for liberating the ship; or an expence is incurred for physic and attendance in curing the officers or seamen wounded in defence of the ship; or in reclaiming the ship, or defending a suit in a foreign court of admiralty, and obtaining her discharge from an unjust capture or detention; in these and the like cases, where any sacrifice is deliberately and voluntarily made, or any expence fairly and bonâ fide incurred, to prevent a total loss, such sacrifice or expence is the proper subject of a general contribution, and ought to be rateably borne by the owners of the ship, freight, and cargo, so that the Average what.

In what cases average contributions become payable.

(a) Average is derived from the Latin word averagium, which comes from the verb averare to carry, and originally signified a service which the tenant owed to his lord, by horse or carriage. It is said to have been introduced into commerce to shew the proportion and allotment to be paid by every man according to his goods carried. Cowel.—(b) 12 Co. 63, Moult's case.—(c) Si arbor vel aliud navis instrumentum, removendi communis periculû causâ dejectum est, contributio debetur. ff. l. 14, de leg. Rhod. de jact. Vid. Molloy, b. 2, c. 2, § 6. But if the loss of the masts, anchors, sails, &c. be occasioned by mere stress of weather, this is not a general average, but the loss falls on the owner. Le Guidon, ch. 5, art. 20. Vid. case of the Copenhagen, 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 289.

loss may fall equally on all, according to the equitable maxim of the civil law,—Nemo debet locupletari aliena jactura. The application of this principle was understood by the Rhodians, whose regulations on this subject were adopted into the Roman law, and make an important head in the Digest, under the title, De lege Rhodia de jactu (a). The leading principle of which is,—Omnium contributione sarcitur, quod pro omnibus datum est.—Æquissimum enim est, commune detrimentum fieri eorum qui propter amissa res aliorum, consecuti sunt ut merces suas salvas haberent (b).

General average.

Upon this principle is founded the doctrine of average contributions, the regulations of which make a necessary part of every system of maritime jurisprudence (c). Average, when understood in this sense, is called general, or gross average, because it falls generally upon the whole or gross amount of the ship, freight, and cargo; and also to distinguish it from what is often, though improperly, termed particular average, but which, in truth, means a particular, or partial, and not a general, loss, and has no affinity to average properly so called.

Particular average.

Petty average.

Beside these, there are other small charges called petty or accustomed averages. Such as pilotage, towage, light-money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge-toll, quarantine, river-charges, signals, instructions, castle-money, pier-money, digging the ship out of the ice, &c. When these petty charges are incurred in the usual course of the voyage, they are not considered as a loss within the meaning of the policy, but only a necessary and ordinary expence: But if incurred for any extraordinary purpose in the voyage, as to provide against any impending danger, or in consequence of the ship's being driven out of her course by stress of weather; they will then be deemed gross or general average, for which the insurer will be liable (d).

The usual petty averages are not a charge on the insurers, unless in cases of general danger.

(a) ff. lib. 14, tit. 2. — (b) ff. lib. 14, de leg. Rhod. de jactu. — (c) Vid. Mo. 297. Show. Ca. Parl. 19. Bearnes lex merc. 148, 1 Mag. 64; 2 Mag. 96, 183, Molloy, b. 2, c. 2, § 6, 12, ff. lib. 14, de leg. Rhod. art. 9. Laws of Wjß. art. 20. Laws of Ol. art. 8. See also the ordinances of the different commercial states, as collected by Mugens. — (d) Vid. 1 Mag. 72. 2 Mag. 278. Potlier, h. t. n. 67.

A contribution upon a general average can only be claimed in cases where, upon as much deliberation and consultation between the captain and officers as the occasion will admit of, it appears that the sacrifice, at the time it was made, was absolutely and indispensably necessary for the preservation of the ship and cargo. Some have even gone farther, and have said, that the saving of the ship and cargo must appear to have been in fact owing to such sacrifice (a). But this, beside being in most cases incapable of proof, is quite unreasonable and unjust.

General average can only be claimed where the sacrifice was absolutely necessary.

A loss which does not evidently conduce to the preservation of the ship and cargo, is not a proper ground for an average contribution: As if a pirate having made himself master of a ship and cargo, take only the goods of a particular person (b), or if some particular goods be damaged in a storm; in such cases the rest shall not be contributory (c). So, if upon the apprehension of an enemy, some goods are landed and secured on shore, and the rest taken; the owner of the goods taken shall not have average of the goods saved; for the salvage of these is not the cause of the taking of the rest; neither was the taking of those the cause of the salvage of the goods saved (d).

And where it conduces to the preservation of the ship.

So, it must appear that the ship and the rest of the cargo were in fact saved: For if goods be thrown overboard in a storm, and the ship afterwards perish in the same storm, there shall be no contribution of the goods saved, if any; because the object for which the goods were thrown overboard was not attained. But if the ship be preserved by the jettison, or throwing goods overboard, and continue her course, but is afterwards lost; the effects saved from this last misfortune, if any, shall contribute to the loss sustained by the jettison; because to that their preservation was once owing (e).

And where the ship was in fact saved.

(a) Beawes 148. — (b) Mal. lex merc. 109. — (c) R. Mo. 297. — (d) R. Show, Ca. Parl. 20. — (e) 2 Mag. 98, 240. Ord. Louis XIV. tit. contrib. art. 15, 16. Semb. cont. 1 Mag. 56. Vid. Sham. Ca. Parl. 20. Mo. 297.

If goods, put into lighters to enable a ship to get up a river, be lost, the rest shall contribute. But if the ship be lost, the goods in the lighters shall not contribute.

Upon the same principle, if a ship, upon her arrival at the mouth of a river or harbour, be found too deeply laden to get over a bar, or to sail up, and the captain, to lighten her, put part of her cargo into lighters, and these lighters are lost; the owners of the ship and the remaining goods shall contribute to this loss; because the removal of part of the cargo from the ship into the lighters was for the general benefit. But should the ship be lost, and the lighters be saved, the owners of the goods preserved in the lighters shall not contribute to this loss; because the ship could not be said to have been lost for the preservation of the goods in the lighters, and because it is a general rule that a contribution is only due when the ship and the remaining cargo have been preserved from the peril to which they were exposed (a).

Whether the wages, &c. during an unlawful detention, be a general average.

If a ship be unjustly captured and carried into a foreign port, it is said that, not only the charge of reclaiming her, but also the wages and expences of the ship's company during the detention, shall be brought into a general average (b).

The question, whether the wages and provisions of the ship's company, during an embargo or detention by the authority of the state, either at the port of departure, or at a foreign port, be a general average, has not yet been determined. The principle of the Rhodian law does not apply to such expences, because the detention does not proceed from the act of the master, or conduce to the general benefit. Mr. Justice Buller, in the case of Da Costa v. Newnham (c), speaking of the expence of wages and provisions during an embargo, thus expresses himself, — "The court has said, that these charges shall fall upon the owners only, and the freight must bear them."

Whether such charges, where a ship is forced to go into port to refit, be a general average.

In Beawes's Lex Mercatoria (d), it is said that, where a ship is forced to enter a port to repair the damage she has suffered in a storm, being unable to continue her voyage without apparent risk of being lost, the wages and provisions for the crew, from the day it was resolved to seek a port to refit the vessel, to the day of her departure from thence, with all the charges of unloading, reloading, anchorage, pilotage, and every other expence incurred by this necessity, shall be brought into a general average.

(a) Vid. 1 Mag. 56. Malyne, 109, 110 — (b) Beawes, 166, 1 Mag. 67. Vid. Ord. of Louis XIV. tit. Avaries, art. 7. — (c) 2 T. R. 407. inf. ch. 13, § 2. — (d) 166.

The doctrine here laid down, is not warranted by the authorities upon this subject which we are taught to look up to with the greatest respect. A case similar to the case here put will be found in the Digest, where it is stated that a ship, in a voyage to Ostia, met with a violent tempest, and having her rigging, masts, and yards destroyed by lightning, she was forced to put into Hippo in great distress. There she underwent a complete repair, and had all necessaries provided for her; and having put to sea again, she arrived at Ostia, and delivered her cargo in good condition. It was made a question, whether the owners of the cargo ought to contribute to make good the damage which the ship had sustained? The answer was in the negative; because the expence incurred at Hippo was rather to repair the ship, and put her in a condition to resume her voyage, than to preserve the cargo (a).—All the modern writers on this subject adopt this decision, and hold it to be the clear law (b). But though there has never yet been any solemn decision on this point in any of the courts of Westminster, the above doctrine, as laid down in Beaumes, seems to have been countenanced by judges of great authority.

As, where an action was brought upon a policy on a ship, to recover the amount of wages and provisions

The negative clearly laid down in the Rhodian law.

Lateward v. Curlling, at N. P. after Trin. 1776. Park 125.

(a) Navis, adversa tempestate depressa, igne fulminis densis armamentis, et arbore et antenna Hipponem delata est; ibique tumultuariis armamentis ad presens comparatis, Ostiam navigavit, et onus integrum pertulit. Questum est, an hi, quorum onus fuit, nauta pro damno conferre debeant.—Respondit, non debere hic enim sumptis instruenda magis navis quam conservandorum mercium gratia factus est. ff. de leg. Rhod. de jactu, lib. 14, 2, 6.—

(b) Vid. Vinnius leg. Rhod. p. 266, Kuricke, p. 774, Loccenius, lib. 2, c. 8, Roccus de navib. not. 59, Emerig. tom. 1, 624, and the other authorities there cited.

Upon a policy on the ship, wages while the ship was under a repair, not occasioned by any extraordinary accident, cannot be recovered.

expended

But there may be exceptions to this rule,

If a ship be obliged to put into port to repair, the charges of unloading and reloading the cargo, and the expenses of the repair, are a general average.

Yet, damage occasioned by wear and tear, or stress of weather, is not a general average.

expended during the time she went from Bengal to Bombay to repair;—Lord Mansfield, as he frequently did afterwards on similar occasions, held that, as the insurance was on the ship only, and the claim was for wages, the action could not be maintained. But he said, that there might be cases where exceptions to the general rule ought to be allowed; but that, in order to consider a case as excepted, it must appear that the expence was absolutely necessary, and occasioned by some of the perils mentioned in the policy.

In the case of Da Costa v. Newnham (a), Mr. Justice Buller cites the above passage from Beauves, and though it was not necessary, he said, to determine that point then, he seemed disposed to concur in it. It was there determined, however, that where a ship is obliged to put into a port to repair, and this is necessary for the safety of the whole concern, the charges of unloading, reloading, and taking care of the cargo, and also the wages and provisions of the workmen hired for the repair, become a general average. This decision, which, with great deference, seems not to have been sufficiently considered, comes very near, in principle, to the doctrine in Beauves: The only difference consists in this, that Beauves allows the wages and provisions of the seamen, during the interruption, to be brought into a general average; but in the above case, the crew were discharged at the place where the ship was repaired, and therefore it was unnecessary to decide that point (b).

Still, the leading principle of law is, that no injury occasioned by wear and tear, or by the winds or waves, in the ordinary course of the voyage, shall be the subject of general average. As if the ship be damaged in her hull; if her sails are blown away or destroyed, or her masts, yards, cables, &c. are broken by the violence of the winds and waves, the loss must fall on the owner alone (c).

(a) 2 T.R. 407, post. ch. 13, § 2. — (b) See the case of the Copenhagen, 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 494. in which Sir W. Scott held that the expences of unloading and reloading the cargo, for the purpose of a repair, is a general average. — (c) ff. lib. 14. t. 2. de lege Rhod. de jactu, § 1. Roccus not. 60, Laws of Oleron, 9, of Wish. 12.

For the ship is like the tool or instrument of a workman in his trade. If, in doing his work, he break his hammer, his anvil, or any other instrument, he can claim no satisfaction for this from his employer. ‘Si conservatis mercibus, deterior facta sit navis, aut quid exarmaverit, nulla facienda est collatio: Quia dissimilis earum rerum causa sit, quæ navis gratia parentur, et earum pro quibus mercedem aliquis acceperit. Nam et si faber incudem aut maleum fregerit, non imputaretur ei qui locaverit opus: Sed si voluntate vectorum, vel propter aliquem metum, id detrimentum factum sit, hoc ipsum sarciri oportet (a).

In favour of Beaver's doctrine it may be plausibly urged, that, as the repair is necessary to the completion of the voyage, and therefore for the general benefit of the whole concern, all ought to contribute to the expence. But, in answer, it may be contended with better reason, and upon sounder principles, that when the owner takes goods on board upon freight, he not only engages, by the usual terms of the charter-party, ‘that the ship shall be tight, staunch, and strong, and furnished with all necessaries for the intended voyage,’ but also that, ‘during the course of the voyage, the ship shall be kept tight and staunch, and furnished with sufficient men, and other necessaries, to the best of the owner’s endeavours.’ And this is no more than the law requires of every owner who takes goods on board, without a charter-party. If, therefore, the ship be so damaged as to be incapable of proceeding on the voyage, the owners are bound to have another ship, if one can be procured, to carry the goods to the port of delivery; but it was never pretended that the hire of this new ship is a subject of a general average. The following case, though upon the construction of a charter-party, is not inapplicable to this subject.

A ship, chartered for a voyage to the East Indies and back, sprung a leak on her homeward passage, which obliged her to put into the Cape of Good Hope, and there take out her cargo, in order to her being repaired. Upon the ship’s return, the owners claimed from the freighter a payment in nature of general average, towards the ex-

*Fuckson v. Char-
nock, 8 T. R.
509.*

A ship is obliged by necessity to put into a port to repair: The expences of this repair are not a general average; the owner being bound to keep the ship in repair during the voyage.

(a) ff. l. 14, tit. 2, de leg. Rhod. de jact. § 2.

pence of the repair, the maintenance of the crew, and other charges occasioned by the necessity of the repair. —But the court held that, by the terms of the charter-party, the owners were to keep the ship in repair during the voyage, at their own expence; and that the freighter was to be liable for general average only in the case of jettison; and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any thing for the expences incurred at the Cape.

Particular average.

If a ship spring a leak in a storm, by which goods on board are spoiled; this is a simple or particular average, or particular loss, and not the subject of an average contribution (a).

But any injury voluntarily done to the ship or her tackle, for the general safety, is a general average.

But if damage be voluntarily done to the ship, by cutting her sides or deck to facilitate a necessary jettison, or by running her on shore to avoid an enemy, or the danger of a storm (b); or if the captain, compelled by necessity, cut away and abandon his masts, or any other part of the rigging or furniture, to lighten the ship in the moment of distress; the loss and expences occasioned by these sacrifices must be made good by contribution. In the same manner are defrayed the port duties and other charges occasioned by taking a ship into a port, to avoid an impending peril, and the expence of extraordinary assistance there (c).

Birkley & others v. Presgrave, 1 East 220.

The owners of the ship may maintain an action against the owner of goods on board, to recover a contribution for sacrifices of the ship's tackle, and expences incurred, to save the goods.

Therefore, where the captain cut the ship's cable and made other sacrifices of the ship's tackle and furniture, to prevent her from being cast away in a storm; and also employed, and paid a number of men to keep the ship, which had been damaged in the storm, free from water in order that a cargo of corn, which was then on board, might not be damaged; it was determined that this was a general average, and that the owner of the ship might maintain an action at law, against the owner of the corn, to recover his contribution.

(a) Consolato del mare, ch. 63, vid. alio ch. 193; 194. Le Guidon ch. 5, art. 20. Laws of Wisby, art. 19. Régul de nav. n. 59.—(b) ff. ut sup. 14, 23, and 5. 1. R. Marston v. Dunsay, Select Ca. of Evidence, 58.—(c) Laws of Wisby, art. 55. Beames, 165, Molloy, b. 2, ch. 6, §. 5. Wellwood, tit. 20.

But,

But, where a ship was captured by a privateer, but, on account of a heavy gale, and the sea running high, the privateer could not take possession of her, and the ship, availing herself of this, effected her escape; but in doing so, carried such a press of sail, that she was much strained, most of her seams were opened, and the head of her main-mast carried away.—In an action on a policy on this ship, the defendant paid 4 l. per cent. into court, and contended that, as the injury to the ship had been occasioned by an exertion which had the effect of saving both ship and cargo, it ought to be considered as a general average; and that the proportion of this which would fall on the ship would be more than covered by the money paid into court, and cited the above case of Birkley v. Presgrave, wherein Lord Kenyon says,—“All the articles which were made use of by the master and crew, upon the particular urgency, and out of the usual course, for the benefit of the whole concern, and the other expences incurred, must be paid proportionably by the defendant as general average.”—But the court held that the injury sustained by the ship, in this case, was not the proper subject of a general average, but only a particular average, for which the insured was entitled to recover.—Sir James Mansfield C. J. said,—“The case cited differs materially from this case; for there a cable was sacrificed for the benefit of the whole concern. This is only a common sea risk. If the weather had been better, or the ship stronger, nothing might have happened.”

With great deference, it might be observed on this case, that the injury sustained by the ship must have been, either the effect of sea damage, in the ordinary course of the voyage; and then, as she finally arrived at her port of destination, the underwriters would not have been liable for any loss. Or, it must have been the effect of the effort to escape, and therefore a sacrifice for the general benefit of the whole concern; in which case, it was the proper subject of a general average, and then the underwriters would be liable only for the proportion of this which would fall on the ship.

As to the things on board which shall be liable to contribute to a general average, the rule seems to be,—that the ship, freight, and every thing remaining on board

Covington v. Roberts, C. B. Mich 1808, MS. S. C. 2 New Rep. 378.

A ship being captured by a privateer, afterwards escapes by using a press of sail; but in doing so, she suffers material damage:—This was held not to be a general average, but a partial loss, for which the underwriters were liable.

Observations on this case.

What things shall be liable to contribute to a general average.

that

that can properly be deemed a part of the cargo, shall be subject to this charge; and therefore money, plate, and even jewels, though their weight could not have increased the danger of the ship, must contribute according to their value (a); because the advantage derived from the sacrifice was not in proportion to the weight, but to the value of the things saved. But the persons on board, their wearing-apparel, the jewels or ornaments belonging to their persons, shall not contribute (b). Neither are seamen's wages liable to contribute (c); for if they were, seamen might sometimes be tempted to resist when a sacrifice is necessary for the general safety.

What not.

It is the captain's duty, on his arrival in port, to settle the contribution.

If the ship escape the dangers which made the sacrifice necessary, and arrive at her port of destination, the captain regularly should make his protests; and he, with some of the crew (d), must swear that the goods were thrown overboard, money paid, or other loss sustained, for the safety of the ship and goods, and for the preservation of the lives of those on board, and for no other cause (e). The average, if not settled before, should then be adjusted, and it should be paid before the cargo is landed, for the owners of the ship have a lien on the goods on board, not only for the freight, but also to answer all averages and contributions that may be due (f).

Remedy against the captain for neglecting to adjust the average, or to collect it.

Should this be neglected, the particular sufferer is not without remedy: For, as it is the duty of the captain to detain the goods on board till the contribution be made, an action would, I conceive, lie against him, or against the owners, for a neglect of that duty. If the loss were in money paid, an action on the case for money paid, would unquestionably lie against each person bound to contribute for his share; if in goods, a special action on the case, founded on the custom of trade, would lie against each person liable to contribute (a), or a bill in equity might be filed against them all.

(a) 1 Mag. 62, Molloy tit. Aver. § 4. Per Buller, J. in Peters v. Milligan, at N. P. after M. 1787.—(b) Id. Molloy, l. 2, c. 6, §. 14, de leg. Rhod. 2, art. 8. Laws of Oler. art. 8. and of Wijb. art. 20. As to freight, vid. 2 T. R. 407.—(c) 1 Mag. 71.—(d) Mal. lex merc. 113, says, with most part of his company.—(e) Beawes 148. Molloy, l. 2, c. 6, § 2. Mal. L. M. 113.—(f) Mal. L. M. 113.

The mode of ascertaining the amount of each person's contribution, is not very accurately defined in our law.—It is usually done, upon the ship's arrival at her port of discharge, by ascertaining the neat value of the ship, freight, and cargo, as if nothing had been lost, but all had arrived safe (b). These are to be valued at the price they would fetch in ready money at the port of discharge; and the neat amount, after deducting all charges, is the sum which is subject to the contribution (c). And each person's share of the loss will bear the same proportion to the value of his property, as the whole loss bears to the aggregate value of the ship, freight, and cargo.

How the contribution shall be settled.

Different foreign states have established a variety of positive regulations, as to the degree in which the ship shall be liable to contribute. Some, as in England, make the ship contribute for her full value and the freight (d); others, for half her value, and one third of the freight; others again, for half the value of ship and freight.

In what degree the ship shall be liable.

In England the ship contributes for her full value and freight.

In England, the ship is valued at the price she was worth on her arrival at her port of delivery; and almost all foreign states follow the same rule (e). The value of the freight is the clear sum which the ship has earned after seamen's wages, pilotage, and all such other petty charges as come under the denomination of petty averages, are deducted; of which the cargo bears two thirds, and the ship the remaining third.

The ship and freight are valued at what they are worth at the port of delivery.

As to the mode of valuing the jettison, the rule of the Roman law is, 'Portio autem pro estimatione rerum quæ salvæ sunt, et earum quæ amissæ sunt, præstari solet. Nec ad rem pertinet, si hæc, quæ amissæ sunt, pluris veniri poterunt; quoniam detrimenti, non lucri, sit præstatio. Sed

How the jettison shall be valued.

(a) Ms. 297, Show. Ca. Parl. 19, R. Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 Eg. 220. sup. 542.—(b) It is necessary to take the goods lost into this account, otherwise the owner of them would be the only person who would not be a loser.—(c) Vid. 1 Mag. 69, Molloy, tit. Aver. § 15.—(d) Königsbergb, Hamburgb, and Copenhagen. Vid. 2 Mag. 207, 237, 339.—(e) 2 Mag. ut sup.

'in his rebus, quarum nomine conferendum est, aestimatio debeat haberi, non quanti emptæ, sint, sed quanti venire possunt (a).' In England it was formerly the custom to value goods at prime cost, if the loss happened before half the voyage was performed; but if after, then at the price they would have borne at the port of delivery (b). But that distinction is exploded, and it is now the settled practice with us, to estimate the goods lost, as well as those saved, at the price they would have fetched at the port of delivery, on the ship's arrival there, freight, duties, and other charges, being deducted (c).

Under the general words of the policy, the insurer is bound to pay all average contributions.

If the sacrifice be made to avert any of the perils insured against, the contribution will be a loss within the policy. And it makes no difference whether the insured pay towards, or receive, the contribution. He must, in either case, bear his proportion of the general loss, and this ought to fall on the insurer. The doctrine of Roccus is, 'Factu facto, ex maris tempestatem, pro sublevanda navii, an teneantur assuretores ad solvendum aestimationem rerum jactarum domino ipsarum? Dic eos non teneri, quia pro rebus jactis sit contributio, inter omnes merces habentes in illa navii pro solvendo pretio domino ipsarum, et ideo si assuretus recuperat pretium rerum jactarum, non potest agere contra assuretores; tamen teneantur assuretores ad rescindendum illam ratem et portionem, quam solvit assuretus in illam contributionem faciendo inter omnes, habentes merces in illa navii, quæ portio cum non recuperetur ab aliis, habetur pro deperdita, et proinde ad illam portionem tenentur assuretores (d).''

Where goods insured have been thrown overboard for the general benefit, it would seem that the owner of the goods ought, in the first instance, to claim the accustomed contribution, and resort to the underwriters only for the residue, which is in fact the true amount of his loss. If, however, this contribution should, from whatever cause, remain unpaid after the voyage is ended, Pothier holds that the underwriter will be liable for the whole value of the jettison; and they will have a right to sue for contribution in the name of the insured (a). I cannot approve of this practice, it permits an abandonment, in a case where there can only be a partial loss.

(a) Dig. lib. 14. tit. 2. De lege Rhod. de jactu, § 4.—
(b) Mal. Lex Merc. 113.—(c) Molloy, tit. Aver. § 15. Vid.
2 Merc. 100, 285, 339.—(d) Roccus, h. t. n. 62.

SECT. VIII.

Of Loss by Salvage.

AS the expence of salvage, like average contributions, is generally a charge for which the insurer is liable, within the meaning of the policy, the subject of salvage must, like that of average, sometimes incidentally occur in the consideration of partial losses; and therefore it will be proper, under this head, to enquire in what cases, and to what amount, salvage shall be a loss within the policy.

Salvage originally meant the thing or goods saved from shipwreck or other loss; and in that sense it is generally to be understood in our old books. But it is at present more frequently understood to mean the compensation made to those by whose means the ship or goods have been saved from the effects of shipwreck, fire, pirates, enemies, or any other loss or misfortune. This compensation, which is now usually made in money, was, before the use of money became general, made by a delivery of part of the effects saved. At common law, the party who has saved the goods of another from loss or any imminent peril, has a lien on the goods, and may retain them in his possession till payment of a reasonable salvage, like that which a taylor, an innkeeper, or a common carrier, has upon the clothes, the horses, or the goods of his customer (b).

Salvage, what.

At common law the party has a lien on the things saved, till payment of salvage.

(a) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 52, 165. — (b) Per Holt, C. J. in Hartford v. Jones, 1 Lord Ray. 393; 2 Salk. 654; Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 202, Pothier, h. t. n. 134.

How salvage is regulated.

Every maritime state has certain regulations to ascertain in what case, and to what amount, salvage shall be paid. To attempt to give an account of all such regulations, in foreign countries, would be more a work of curiosity than of utility.—It will be sufficient for our present purpose, to state shortly the regulations which the law of England has established on this subject, and which will be principally found in our statutes; some of which are of very ancient date (a). But the regulations upon this subject which are now principally in force, are found in the stat. 12 An. stat. 2. c. 18. and subsequent acts, made for the protection of ships and goods stranded on the coasts of this kingdom.

By 12 An. stat. 2, c. 18, § 2, Persons employed in the salvage of ships, &c. shall within 30 days be paid a reasonable reward.

That statute, after directing the means to be employed for the preservation of ships in distress, enacts, (§ 2.)

‘ That, all persons who shall be employed in preserving ‘ ships or vessels in distress, or their cargoes, shall,
‘ within 30 days after the service performed, be paid a ‘ reasonable reward for the same, by the commander or ‘ other superior officer, mariners, or owners of the ship
‘ or goods so saved; and in default thereof, the ship, ‘ vessel, or goods so saved shall remain in custody of the ‘ collector of the customs or his deputy, until all charges ‘ shall be paid, and until all persons so employed shall ‘ be reasonably gratified for their trouble; or good security given, to the satisfaction of the several parties that ‘ are to receive the same. And in case the commander ‘ or other superior officer, mariners, or owners, of the ‘ ship or goods so saved, shall disagree with the said
‘ officer of the customs (b), touching the money deserved ‘ by the persons so employed, the commander of the

How secured to them.

If the parties disagree about the quantum, three neighbouring justices shall adjudge it.

(a) 3 Ed. I. c. 4; 4 Ed. I. c. 2; 27 Ed. III. c. 13.—

(b) Where the salvage is made by a person employed by the master of the vessel in distress, though under the inspection of the officers of the customs, the person so employed shall be considered as the agent of the owners; and a disagreement between him and the owners, as to the quantum of his charges, cannot be adjusted by three magistrates, that not being a case within this act. R. Baking v. Day, 3 East 57.

‘ ship

‘ ship saved, or the owner of the goods therein, and the ‘ said officer of the customs may nominate three neigh‘ bouring justices, who shall adjust the quantum of the ‘ gratuity to be paid to the several persons acting in the ‘ salvage of the ship or goods; and such adjustment
 ‘ shall be binding to all parties, and shall be recoverable ‘ in an action at law to be brought by the respective ‘ persons to whom the same shall be allotted by the jus‘ tices. And in case no person shall appear to make his ‘ claim to all or any of the goods saved, then the chief ‘ officer of the customs of the nearest port, shall apply ‘ to three of the nearest justices, who shall put him or ‘ some responsible person in possession of such goods, ‘ such justices taking an account thereof in writing, to ‘ be signed by such officers of the customs; and if the ‘ goods shall not be legally claimed within 12 months, by
 ‘ the right owners, they shall be publicly sold, or, if pe‘ rishable, forthwith sold, and the produce of the sale, ‘ after all charges deducted, with a fair account of the ‘ whole, shall be transmitted to the Exchequer, there to ‘ remain for the benefit of the owner, when appearing;
 ‘ who, upon affidavit, or other proof of his right, to ‘ the satisfaction of one of the barons of the coif, shall,
 ‘ upon his order, receive the same out of the Exchequer.’

How the goods saved shall be disposed of, if no owner appears.

This statute also prescribes the punishment to be inflicted on persons guilty of plundering or destroying ships in distress. But this being found insufficient to repress these barbarous practices, the stat. 26 G. II., c. 19, has enacted a variety of further regulations for the more effectual punishment of offenders and the better protection of ships in distress.

On the subject of salvage, the 5th section of this act provides, ‘ That in case any person, not employed in the ‘ salvage of the ship or goods, shall, in the absence of ‘ the persons so employed and authorized, save any such ‘ ship or goods, and cause the same to be carried, for ‘ the benefit of the owners, into port, or to any near ad‘ joining custom-house, or other place of safe custody, ‘ immediately giving notice thereof to some magistrate ‘ for custom-house or excise-officer; or shall discover to

By 26 G. II.
 c. 19, § 5
 Persons, though not employed, who shall save any ship or goods, or give notice of any goods unlawfully bought, sold, or concealed,
 shall be entitled to salvage.

‘such magistrate or officer where such goods are wrong‘fully bought, sold, or concealed, then such person shall ‘be entitled to a reasonable reward for such services;
 ‘to be paid by the master or owners of such vessels or ‘goods; and to be adjusted in case of disagreement ‘about the quantum, in like manner as the salvage is to ‘be adjusted and paid by virtue of the stat. 12 Ann.’

By § 6. The nearest magistrate, collector
 of the customs,
 or chief constable shall call a meeting at the sheriff, magistrates, &c. five of whom may employ persons for saving ships,
 &c.

And by § 6, ‘For the better ascertaining the salvage ‘to be paid in pursuance of this and the former act,
 ‘the justice, mayor, bailiff, collector of the customs, or ‘chief constable, who shall be nearest to the place where ‘the ship or goods shall be stranded, shall forthwith give ‘public notice for a meeting, to be held as soon as pos‘sible, of the sheriff, or his deputy, the justices, mayors,
 ‘or other chief magistrates of towns, coroners, or com‘missioners of the land tax, or any five or more of ‘them, who are required to give aid in the execution ‘of this and the former act, and to employ proper ‘persons for the saving of ships in distress, and such ‘ships and effects as shall be stranded or cast away;
 ‘and also to examine persons on oath touching the same,
 ‘or the salvage thereof, and to adjust the quantum of ‘such salvage, and distribute the same among the per‘sons concerned in such salvage, in case of disagree‘ment among the parties, or the said persons; and that ‘every such magistrate, &c. attending and acting at such ‘meeting, shall be paid four shillings a-day for his ex-‘pences, out of the goods saved by their care or direc‘tion.—Provided (§ 7.) that if the charges and rewards
 ‘for salvage, directed to be paid by this and the former ‘act, shall not be fully paid, or sufficient security given ‘for the same within 40 days after the services per‘formed, the officer of the customs concerned in such ‘salvage shall borrow or raise so much money as shall ‘be sufficient to pay such charges, or any part thereof ‘remaining unpaid, or not secured as aforesaid, by or ‘upon one or more bill or bills of sale under his hand
 ‘and seal, of the ship or vessel, or cargo saved, or such ‘part thereof as shall be sufficient, redeemable on pay‘ment of the principal sum borrowed, and interest at ‘4 per cent. per annum.’

And examine persons on oath,
 &c. to adjust the quantum of salvage.

Such magistrate,
 &c. to have 4s.
 a-day.

By § 7, if the salvage be not paid, or security given within 40 days, the officer of the customs shall raise money by bill of sale of the ship or goods saved, redeemable on payment of principal and 4 per cent. interest.

There

There are many other regulations in this act, as to the persons by whom this and the former act shall be put in force, and as to the detection and punishment of offenders. The foregoing extracts which have been made for the purpose of shewing that, by our law, the salvage of ships or goods stranded or cast away, is a reasonable satisfaction to the persons employed in saving and protecting them, for their labour; to be estimated, not according to their own arbitrary will, but by persons of the first respectability in and near the place where the misfortune happens.

With respect to salvage in the case of recapture, by the marine law of England, as practised by our courts of admiralty, previous to any parliamentary regulations, if the ship or goods were retaken before condemnation, till which time the jus postliminii continued, the original owner was entitled to have restitution decreed to him, on payment of a reasonable salvage to the recaptors. But by several statutes (a), salvage upon a recapture was fixed at certain rates, according to the length of time the recaptured ship was in the hands of the enemy. It will be sufficient, however, for our present purpose, to state the regulations now in force as they were established by the last prize act.

How salvage upon a recapture was regulated by the marine law.

By stat. 43 G. III. c. 160. § 39. ' If any ship or vessel, taken as prize (b), or any goods therein, shall appear, in the court of admiralty, to have belonged to any of his Majesty's subjects, which were before taken by any of his Majesty's enemies, and at any time afterwards retaken by any of his Majesty's ships, or any privateer, or other ship or vessel under his Majesty's protection; such ships, vessels, and goods shall, in all cases, (save as hereafter excepted), be adjudged to be restored, and shall be ac-

By 43 G. III. c. 160, ships, &c. at any time recaptured, shall pay, if retaken by men of war, one eighth, if by privateers, one sixth, for salvage.

(a) Vid. 13 G. II. c. 4. and 29 G. II. c. 34.—(b) The right of restitution under this act is confined to cases of capture during actual hostilities; and cannot be extended to the case of a vessel confiscated in time of peace for an alledged violation of the revenue laws of France. Case of the Jeune Voyageur, 5 Rob. Adm. Rep. 1.

If retaken by both jointly, the judge of the admiralty shall order such salvage, and in such proportions, as he shall deem fit.

But if the recaptured ship be set forth by the enemy as a ship of war, she shall be lawful prize to the captors.

The insured need not declare for salvage, but may recover under a declaration for the loss which occasioned it, and for the damage the goods saved have sustained.

The court of admiralty regulates the rate of salvage in the case of recaptured neutrals.

cordingly restored, to such former owner or owners, he or they paying for salvage, if retaken by any of his Majesty's ships, one eighth part of the true value thereof, to the flag officers, captains, &c. to be divided as the same act directs: And if retaken by any privateer, or other ship or vessel, one sixth part of the true value of such ships and goods, to be paid to the owners, officers, and seamen of such privateer or other vessel, without any deduction. And if retaken by the joint operation of one or more of his Majesty's ships, and one or more private ships of war, the judge of the court of admiralty, or other court having cognizance thereof, shall order such salvage, and in such proportions, to be paid to the captors, by the owners, as he shall, under the circumstances of the case deem fit and reasonable. But if such recaptured ship or vessel shall appear to have been set forth, by the enemy, as a ship or vessel of war, the said ship or vessel shall not be restored to the former owners; but shall, in all cases, whether retaken by any of his Majesty's ships, or by any privateer, be adjudged lawful prize for the benefit of the captors.

As the insurer does not, in express words, undertake to pay salvage, perhaps the insured could not declare for a loss by the payment of salvage. That form of declaring might, perhaps, be thought too general. Indeed it would be useless to declare so, for he may declare as for that species of loss which occasioned the payment of salvage, and recover the salvage actually paid (a). And upon the same declaration he may recover for the loss, if any, sustained by damage done to the goods saved.

It is usual, in cases of capture and recapture, to declare upon a total loss by capture, and upon this the plaintiff may recover the amount of the salvage and expences.

These regulations relate only to the salvage of British ships recaptured. In the case of neutral ships captured by the enemy, and retaken by British men of war or privateers, the courts of admiralty have a discretionary power of allowing such salvage, and in such proportions, as, under the circumstances of each particular case, may appear just. But there is no positive law or binding regulation, to which parties may appeal for ascertaining the rate of such salvage.—Sir William Scott holds (a), that no salvage is due upon recapture of neutral property out of the hands of the enemy, unless it appear from the ordinances, or the practice of the prize-courts of the enemy, that the first seizure was made under such circumstances as would have exposed the goods to condemnation in the hands of the enemy.

(a) R. Cary v King, Ca. Temp. Hard. 304. Vid. inf. ch. 16, § 2.

As to allies, our courts of admiralty hold that the maritime law of England having adopted a most liberal rule of restitution on salvage, with respect to the recaptured property of its own subjects, gives the benefit of that rule to its allies, till it appear that they act towards British property on a less liberal principle: In such case it adopts their rule, and treats them according to their own measure of justice (b).

In the case of recaptured allies.

Before an action will lie for a loss by payment of salvage upon a recapture, the amount of such salvage must have been ascertained by the decision of a court of admiralty, which alone has jurisdiction to determine as to the right to salvage in every such case; and, in the case of the recapture of neutrals, as to the amount of such salvage.

Salvage upon recapture must be paid under an adjudication of a court of admiralty, to entitle the insured to claim it from the underwriters.

When the salvage, however, is very high, which may happen in the case of shipwreck, the insured may abandon, and call upon the insurer as for a total loss, as we shall have occasion more particularly to observe hereafter, in the chapter upon abandonment.

(a) In the case of the Carlotta, 5 Rob. Adm. Rep. 54.—

(b) So laid down by Sir William Scott, in the case of the Santa Cruz, 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 63, in which case this subject will be found considered much at large, and in his very luminous manner.

SECT. IX.

Of Loss by the Death of Slaves.

AS the act for the abolition of the African slave trade, only prohibits and declares unlawful insurances upon the trade so abolished (a), insurances upon a trading in African slaves, by the subjects of any foreign state, may still, I conceive, be legally made in this country. For this reason, and because questions may yet arise on policies which were effected in this country before the abolition of this trade, it will be proper here to shew what shall be deemed a loss by the death of slaves.

Whether natural death would now be a legal risk

Though we have now no statute in force for the regulation of the slave trade, it is very improbable that in a case of foreign slave trade, our courts would be disposed to tolerate an insurance against the mortality of the slaves by natural death or ill treatment. It may therefore be proper here to shew in what cases the death of slaves shall be deemed a loss within a policy on slaves.

Whether a loss by slaves thrown overboard in a scarcity of water could be insured against.

If the master of a slave ship mistake his course, whereby a scarcity of water ensues, and a number of the slaves are thrown overboard for the preservation of the ship's crew and the rest of the slaves, this has been holden not to be a loss by the perils of the sea (b): Nor would it be a loss of any description within the common policy; and no words, I conceive, could be legally inserted in a policy to meet such a case.

If from the length of the voyage there be a scarcity of provisions, and some of the slaves die for want of food, this is natural death.

So where a slave ship, on her passage to the West Indies, was so retarded by bad weather and other unavoidable accidents, that from the extraordinary length of the voyage, the provisions for the slaves were exhausted, and many of them died from the want of proper food: In this case, though the failure of the provisions was occasioned by the perils of the sea, and the death of the slaves was the necessary consequence of this; the loss must be ascribed to natural death (a).

(a) Vid. stat. 47 G. III. c. 36, § 1, 5.—(b) R. Gregson v. Gilbert, B. R. 23 G. III. Park. 62. inf. ch. 16, § 2.

If, in a policy on slaves, mortality by mutiny be included in the perils insured against; and, in a mutiny, some are killed, others die of their wounds received in the mutiny, others of chagrin, others by swallowing salt water, others jump overboard and are drowned: The underwriters are liable for those who are killed, or mortally wounded, in the mutiny; but not for those who died from the other causes (b).

What shall be mortality by mutiny.

Sect. X.

Of Loss by the Death of Animals.

Valin, and, after him, Pothier, class animals and negro slaves under the same head, and apply the same rules to both (c).—According to these learned writers, if animals, such as horses and other cattle, or beasts or birds of curiosity, be insured in their passage by sea; their death occasioned by tempests, by the shot of an enemy, by jettison in a storm, or by any other extraordinary accident occasioned by any of the perils enumerated in the policy, is a loss for which the underwriters are liable. Not so, if it be occasioned by mere disease or natural death (d).

(a) R. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656.—(b) R. Jones v. Selmoll, 1 T. R. 130. n.—(c) Vid. Valin h. t. art. 11, 15, Pothier h. t. n. 66.—(d) Valin h. t. art. 29, p. 76, Pothier h. t. n. 66. Emerig, tom. 1. p. 393.

SECT. XI.

Of fraudulent Losses.

AT the conclusion of the sixth section of the present chapter (a) we shortly adverted to the punishment of bar-ratry by the laws of other countries. We will, in the present section, shew how piracy and other offences of this nature, and also the offence of procuring wilful and fraudulent losses, with intent to defraud insurers, are punishable by the law of England.

How piracy is punished by the law of England.

The crime of piracy, or robbery upon the high seas, is an offence against the universal law of society; a pirate being, as Lord Coke describes him, hostis humani generis. By the ancient common law, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; and by an alien, to be felony only: But now, since the statute of treasons, 25 Ed. III. c. 2. it is holden to be only felony in a subject (b). Formerly this offence was only cognizable by the admiralty courts, which proceed by the rules of the civil law (c). But it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation, that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, the stat. 28 H. VIII. c. 15, established a new jurisdiction for this purpose, which proceeds according to the course of the common law (d).

The offence of piracy by the common law, consists in the committing of those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed upon land, would amount to felony there (e). But by stat. 11 and 12 W. III. c. 7, § 8 and 9. 'If any natural born subject commit any act of hostility upon the high

(a) Sup. 534.—(b) 3 Inst. 113.—(c) 1 Hawk. P. C. 68.—(d) Vid. 4. Bl. Com. 71.—(e) 1 Haw. P. C. 100.

‘ seas, against others of his Majesty’s subjects, under ‘ colour of a commission from any foreign power;
 ‘ or if any commander or mariner shall betray his trust,
 ‘ and run away with any ship, boat, ordnance ammuni‘ tion or goods; or yield them up voluntarily to any ‘ pirate; or bring any seducing message from any pi‘ rate, enemy, or rebel; or consult, combine, or con‘ federate with, or attempt to corrupt, any officer or ‘ mariners to yield up, or run away with, any ship or ‘ goods, or turn pirate; or shall lay violent hands on ‘ his commander, to hinder him from fighting in de‘ fence of his ship; or shall confine him, or make, or ‘ endeavour to make, any revolt in the ship, shall be ‘ adjudged to be a pirate, felon, and robber, and shall ‘ suffer death and loss of lands, as a pirate, felon and ‘ robber on the sea ought to suffer, whether he be ‘ principal, or merely accessory by setting forth such ‘ pirates, or abetting them before the fact, or receiving ‘ or concealing them or their goods, after it.’ And the stat. 4 G. I. c. 11. expressly excludes the principals from the benefit of clergy. By the stat. 8 G. I. c. 24, trading with known pirates, or furnishing them with stores or ammunition, or fitting out any vessel for that purpose; or confederating or corresponding with them, or forcibly boarding any merchant vessel, though without seizing or carrying her off, and destroying or throwing any of the goods overboard, shall be deemed piracy; and such accessories to piracy as are described in the above stat. 11 and 12 W. III. are declared to be principal pirates, and all pirates convicted by virtue of this act are made felons without benefit of clergy. Thus does the statute law of England aid and enforce the law of nations, as a part of the common law, by inflicting an adequate punishment upon offences against that universal law.

The stat. 1 An. st. 2, c. 9, § 4 and 5, makes it a simple felony in any master or mariner, wilfully to cast away, burn, or destroy any ship to which he belongs, to the prejudice of the owner, or of any merchant who shall load goods thereon, and takes away the benefit

The 1 An. st. 2,
 c. 9, makes it felony to destroy any ship, to the prejudice of the owners of the ship or goods on board; and takes away clergy, if committed at sea.

nefit of clergy from such offences, committed on the high seas.

The 4 G. I. c. 12, extends this to the case of the owner or master who shall destroy any ship to the prejudice of the owners of, or underwriters upon, goods.

Though the insurers are only answerable for losses arising from the accidents and misfortunes incident to maritime adventures, and not for such as proceed from contrivance or design on the part of the insured; yet the temptation to defraud insurers by the wilful and concerted destruction of ships and goods insured, in order to give a colour to fraudulent claims for pretended losses, has been found productive of so many evils, that it became necessary for the legislature to interpose its authority to restrain them: And therefore, by stat. 4 G. I. c. 12, § 3, ‘ If any owner, captain, master, mariner, or other officer of any ship, shall willfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship, of which he is owner, or to which he belongs; or in any manner direct or procure the same to be done, to the prejudice of the person or persons that shall underwrite any policy of insurance thereon; or of any merchant that shall load goods thereon, shall suffer death.’

The 11 G. I. c. 29, takes away clergy from such offences in all cases.

This statute having only made this crime a simple felony, it was found insufficient to restrain the commission of it, and therefore the stat. 11 G. I. c. 29, § 6 and 7, takes away from it the benefit of clergy, and inflicts the same punishment on persons guilty of the like offences, ‘ with intent to prejudice any owner of such ship:’ And it further enacts, that if such offences be committed within the body of any county, they shall be tried in the same manner as other felonies; if on the high seas; then according to the directions of the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Abandonment.

Preliminary Observations.

IT has already been observed (a) that the term total loss does not only signify the absolute destruction of the thing insured, according to its natural import; but also that, in legal and commercial language, it means such a loss or damage to the thing insured, though it specifically remain, as renders it of little or no value to the owner. It also means any loss or misfortune whereby the voyage is lost, or not worth pursuing, and the projected adventure frustrated. In such cases the insured is entitled to call upon the insurer as for a total loss: But then he must abandon; that is, he must renounce and yield up to the insurer all his right, title and claim, to what may be saved, and leave it to him to make the most of it for his own benefit. The insurer then stands in the place of the insured, and becomes legally entitled to all that can be rescued from destruction (b). The idea of abandonment therefore, pre-supposes a total loss in this latter sense, and implies that something remains which may be saved, and which may be given up, or abandoned, to the insurers. For if the insured could only abandon, in the case of a total loss, in the strict and natural sense of the words, there would be nothing to abandon, and abandonment could then be only an useless form.

Nature of abandonment.

It has been said that the practice of abandoning dates its origin from the period when the contract of insurance itself first came into use (c); and yet it does not seem to be a right which necessarily results from the nature of the contract.—That the loss or damage should be made good by the insurer, who has made himself responsible, is perfectly reasonable, and conformable to the spirit of the contract. But it does not necessarily follow from thence, that, in case of a disaster, he should be forced to become the proprietor of the ship or goods insured, merely because he was a surety for their safe arrival: indeed the author of La Guden (a) says, that abandonment is only to be resorted to in extreme cases.

Whether connected with insurance itself.

(a) Sup. 485. — (b) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 133. Ord. of Louis XIV, h. t. art. 47. Ord. Bilboa, art. 32. 1 Vez. 98. — (c) Park 143.

Its probable origin

It seems more probable that abandonment arose from the practice of occasionally introducing into policies, particularly stipulations, that if the thing insured should be spoiled or greatly damaged by any of the perils insured against, it should be abandoned to the insurers, who should be thereupon obliged to pay the entire sum insured; and that simply making good the damage should not be sufficient to discharge them; and stipulations like this, being frequently introduced into the contract, became at length the foundation of general rules; which have been established by positive law in some countries, and adopted in others as part of the general law of insurance.

Whether carried too far.

Be this as it may, it has been thought that, in many instances, the practice of abandoning has been carried too far; and that the insured should, in no case, be permitted to abandon, where the effects insured, or the greatest part of them, still exist, and are in the power of the insured. Mr. Justice Buller seems to have been of opinion, that when this question first came before our courts, it would have been the wisest policy to have determined, that the owners should in no case be allowed to abandon, where the property still existed (b). The first case we find, in our books on the right of abandonment, came before Lord Hardwicke in the court of Chancery in the year 1744: and he, after some deliberation, determined that where a recaptured ship and cargo were sold to pay the salvage, the insured had a right to abandon the surplus, and claim as for a total loss (c).

(a) 7, art. 2. 1755. Vid. 1 To R. 615, 616. (c) Vid. Pringle v. Hartley, 3 Atk. 195, inf.

It must be admitted that the privilege of abandoning, in every case that is deemed a total loss, may sometimes be liable to great abuse. For instance, where, as in the case of capture, the thing insured, and every part of it, is completely gone out of the power of the insured, it is just and proper that he should recover at once as for a total loss, and leave the spes recuperandi to the insurer who will have the benefit of a recapture, or of any other accident, by which the thing may be recovered. But it seems, at first sight, impolitic, not to say unreasonable, that the owner of a ship which is stranded, (the captain and crew being his servants, on the spot, and in possession of the ship and cargo), should be at liberty to abandon these to a number of underwriters, who sometimes find it difficult to act in concert, and who have, perhaps, no means of disposing of the property thus thrown upon their hands, but to the greatest disadvantage.

On the other hand it may be truly said that the captain must occasionally be the agent, not only of the owners or freighters of the ship, but also of every person interested either in the ship or cargo; that he, in case of misfortune, is bound to do the best in his power for the benefit of all concerned; and that, whether he dispose of what is saved for account of the insured, or of the insurer, comes to the same thing, since in both cases the amount must go in diminution of a total loss. Still it must occur to every person who has any experience in subjects of this nature, that it were much better that the master, in case of misfortune, should continue the agent accountable to the owners who know him, and who know the extent of his charge, than to the underwriters who know neither.

Having premised thus much of the general nature of abandonments, we will now proceed to consider,

- I. In what cases the insured may abandon;
- II. Within what time he may abandon;
- III. The form of the abandonment;
- IV. The effect of it;
- V. Of the ordering and disposal of the effects abandoned.

Sect. I.

In what cases the insured may abandon.

The general principle upon which the right of abandoning rests.

IN general it may be laid down that, by the law of insurance, as understood in England, the insured may abandon in every case where, by the happening of any of the misfortunes or perils insured against, the voyage is lost, or not worth pursuing, and the projected adventure is frustrated; or where the thing insured is so damaged and spoiled as to be of little or no value to the owner; or where the salvage is very high; or where what is saved is of less value than the freight; or where further expence is necessary, and the insurer will not undertake, at all events, to pay that expence, &c. (a).

In what case it is permitted in France.

The ordinance of the marine of Louis XIV. (b) which in this, as in most other particulars, is collected from the same ancient sources from whence other countries have drawn their principles of the law of insurance, confines abandonment to these five cases; capture, shipwreck, stranding, arrest of princes, or the entire loss of the effects insured (c).

Valin thinks the latter words mean, not an absolute destruction, but a general loss (d).—Pothier says, they mean a total, or almost total, loss (e). This he explains by saying, that goods which are considerably damaged are deemed to be goods lost; and therefore when all, or almost all, the goods are in that state, it is a total loss. Both these authors cite Le Guidon, where it is laid down that the insured may abandon when there is an average loss or damage which exceeds half the value of the goods insured, or in case they be so damaged as not to be worth the freight or little more (a).

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, in Miles v. Fletcher, inf. — (b) h. t. art. 46. — (c) "Perte entière des effets assurés" — (d) "Perte generique des effets assurés, sans être absolue." Valin on art. 19, h. t. p. 61. — (e) "Perte totale ou presque totale des effets assurés." Pothier, h. t. n. 119.

Emerigon objects to both these interpretations as being vague and uncertain, and as leaving it too much in the breast of the judge to decide what shall be an entire, or almost entire, loss, which, he says, must lead to great doubts and ruinous litigation (b).

By the French law, the right to abandon seems to depend on the species of misfortune which has happened; with us it depends rather on the degree of loss sustained in consequence of it.

Such are the general principles upon which the right of abandoning rests: We will now take a view of the cases in which those principles have been exemplified, 1st, Upon losses by capture, and arrest of princes; and, 2dly, upon other losses.

1. Of the right of abandoning, upon Capture, and arrest of Princes.

As capture and arrest of princes have afforded the most frequent occasions for abandonment, so most of the great leading principles upon which the right of abandoning rests, have been discussed and established in cases of that sort.

Capture by an enemy or a pirate, or an arrest of princes, or even an embargo, is primâ facie a total loss; and immediately upon the capture, or upon a mere arrest, or at any time while the ship continues under detention, the insured may elect to abandon, and give notice to the insurer of his intention to do so, and thus entitle himself

Capture or arrest of princes is, primâ facie a total loss, for which the insurer may abandon.

(a) "Le marchand chargeur est en liberté de faire à ses assureurs de la propriété qu'il a en la marchandise chargée, lors et quand il advient avarie qui excède ou endommage la moitié de la marchandise, ou telle empirance en la marchandise qu'elle ne value le frêt, ou peu de chose d'avantage." Le Guidon, ch. 7, art. 1— (b) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 183.

to claim as for a total loss from the insurer: For, from the moment of the capture, or arrest, the owners lose their power over the ship and cargo, and are deprived of the free disposal of them; and, in the opinion of the merchant, his right of disposal being suspended or rendered uncertain, is equivalent to a total deprivation. It would therefore be unreasonable to oblige the insured to wait the event of capture, detention, or embargo (a).

And he is not bound to litigate the validity of the capture.

And immediately, upon receiving intelligence of a capture, he may abandon; nor is he bound to make any claim or appeal to the enemy's courts of admiralty, or to litigate there the validity of the capture; but may wholly leave that to the underwriters (b).

But he is not bound to abandon upon a capture.

But the insured is, in no case, bound to abandon; and, as the law now stands, no capture of the enemy can be so total a loss as to leave no possibility of recovery, for the jus postliminii continues for ever, except in the case of a captured ship being turned into a ship of war. If the owner himself should retake the ship or goods, he will be fully entitled to them; and if they be retaken at any time by another, whether before or after condemnation, he will be entitled to restitution, upon payment of a settled salvage (c).—The chance of the owner's recovering his property does not, however, suspend his right to demand as for a total loss: But, in the case of a recapture, justice is considered to be done to the insurer by putting him in the place of the insured. A policy of insurance, as a contract of indemnity, is always liberally construed (d).

From a wager policy the insured cannot abandon.

There is this difference between a policy upon interest, and a wager policy, that, in the one case the insured may, if he think proper, abandon the moment he has notice of a capture or detention, and this will bind the underwriters, whatever may be the ultimate fate of the ship; but in the case of a wager policy, there can be no abandonment, because the insured has nothing to abandon (a)."

(a) Vid. Lord Mansfield's judgment in Goss v. Withers, 2 Bur. 696, inf. 567. (b) Vid. 2 Bur. 696; Adams v. Luffman v. Gurney, 3 Ti. R. 479. (c) Vid. Rat. 43 G. III. ch. 156, sup. 551.—(d) See Lord Mansfield's judgment in Goss v. Withers, 2 Bur. 696, 7.

But a capture or arrest does not necessarily, and at all events, terminate in a total loss, so as to entitle the insured to abandon at any time; for, as he cannot abandon till he has received advice of the loss, if, at the time he receives such advice, or before he has elected to abandon, he receive advice that the ship or goods insured are recovered, or are in safety, he cannot then abandon; because he can only abandon while it is a total loss, and he knows it to be so, not after he knows of the recovery. Therefore, if a captured ship be retaken and permitted to proceed on her voyage, so that she suffer but a small temporary inconvenience; this is only a partial, and not a total, loss (b).

But a capture or arrest does not necessarily terminate in a total loss.

On the other hand, a title to restitution, upon a recapture, does not necessarily, and at all events, deprive the insured of the right to abandon: For if, in consequence of the capture, the voyage be lost, or not worth pursuing; if the salvage be very high; if farther expence be necessary, and the insurer will not undertake at all events to pay it, the insured may abandon.—The rule is, that, if the thing insured be recovered before any loss is paid, the insured is entitled to claim as for a total, or a partial loss, according to the final event; that is, according to the state of the case at the time he makes his claim. There is no vested right to a total loss, till the insured, having a right to abandon, elects to do so; for he is only

Neither does a recapture necessarily deprive the insured of the right to abandon.

If the thing insured be recovered before a loss is paid, the loss will be total or partial, according to the final event.

(a) Vid. Lord Mansfield's judgment in Kulen Kemp v Vigne, 1 T. R. 304, sup. 130.—(b) By the law of France, the ship being once captured, it is always a total loss; and the legal effect of it is presumed to continue, though the ship be released or retaken. The recovery of the goods insured is only for the account of the insurer, who cannot, under pretence that they are arrived at their port of destination, refuse the abandonment. The recovery of the goods is merely in nature of salvage. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 188.

entitled to an indemnity for his loss as it stands at the time of the action brought, or offer to abandon.

But if, after a total loss has been actually paid, the thing insured be recovered, the insurer cannot oblige the insured to refund the money he has received; but he shall stand in the place of the insured, and so no injustice is done.

But if, after a total loss has been actually paid, the thing insured be recovered, the insurer shall not be obliged to refund

The two following cases are cited as examples to shew that though a captured ship be recaptured, yet if the voyage be lost, the loss will be total, and the insured will have a right to abandon.

Pringle v. Hartley, in Chan. 1743, 3 Atk. 195.

A ship is taken, and retaken, and sold in a distant country to pay the salvage, and the residue of the proceeds remains in the court of admiralty there:—The insured may abandon, and recover as for a total loss.

The first was the case of a ship insured from London to Bermudas and Carolina, taken by a Spanish privateer, retaken by an English privateer, and carried into Boston, in America, where no person appearing to give security, or answer for the salvage, she was condemned and sold in the court of admiralty there. The recaptors had their moiety of the proceeds, and the surplus remained in the hands of the officers of the court.—An action at law was brought upon the policy by the insured, who obtained a verdict against the underwriter for a total loss. The underwriter filed a bill in Chancery, and moved for an injunction to stay the proceedings at law, insisting that the insured ought not to recover more than the salvage, which, in this case, was a moiety, as the stat. 13 G. II. c. 4, § 18, gave the thing saved, subject to salvage, to the owner, who was entitled to receive it from the officers of the admiralty court at Boston. The insured, in his answer, swore that he had offered, and was then willing, to relinquish his interest to the insurers in the benefit of the salvage, and would give them a letter of attorney to receive it.—Lord Chancellor Hardwick determined that there was no ground for an injunction in this case.—He said:—"At the time of the trial, the insured knew that the ship was retaken.—The question arises on the stat. 13 G. II. with regard to the salvage. It has been said that there ought to be only half the loss recovered on the policy; and, as to that, the act has made great alteration in the law of nations, with respect to recaptures. The carrying a ship infra presidia hostium, or si pernoctaverit with the enemy, makes it the prize of the recaptor, as if it had been originally the ship of the enemy; but, by the act, the recapture reverts the property in the owner. If there had been a salvage, it must have been deducted out of the money recovered under the policy; but if none came to the hands of the insured, the jury could not take notice of it. It is uncertain whether the insured will receive any thing or not: And if any thing be recovered, he must have an allowance for his expences in recovering it. Therefore, being willing to relinquish his interest in the salvage, he ought to have recovered the whole money insured. It would be mischievous if it were otherwise; for then, upon a recapture, the insured would be in a worse situation than if the ship were totally lost."

In the second case, two insurances were made, the one on the ship David and Rebecca, the other on goods on board, 'At and from Newfoundland to her port of discharge in Portugal or Spain, without the Streights, or England.'—In an action upon the former policy, the plaintiff declared upon a total loss by capture; upon the latter, the declaration alledged that divers quantities of fish and other merchandizes, were put on board; and averred that one fourth of the said goods were necessarily thrown overboard in a storm, to preserve the ship and the rest of the cargo; after which jettison, the ship and the remainder of the goods, were taken by the French.—It appeared on the trial, that the ship was taken on the 23d of December 1756; and the master, mates, and all the sailors, except an apprentice and a landman, were taken out of her and carried to France. The ship remained in the hands of the French eight days, and was then retaken by a British privateer, and brought into Milford Haven on the 18th of January; and immediate notice was given by the insured to the underwriters, with an offer to abandon. Before the capture, the ship, in a violent storm, was separated from her convoy, and so disabled as to be incapable of proceeding on her voyage, without going into some port to refit. Part of her cargo Goss v. Withers,

2 Bur. 683.

A ship, after throwing part of her cargo overboard in a storm, and being disabled from proceeding on her voyage till refitted, is captured and her crew taken out; but after being eight days in possession of the enemy, is recaptured and carried into an English port, upon which, the insured give notice to abandon. Before the ship can be refitted, the rest of the cargo is spoiled.—This is a total loss, and the insured may abandon.

was thrown overboard, in the storm, and the rest spoiled, while the ship lay at Milford Haven, after the offer to abandon, and before the ship could be refitted—Upon this case, two questions were made; 1st, Whether this was a loss by capture for which the insurers were liable. 2^{dly}, Whether, under all the circumstances, the insured had a right to abandon the ship to the insurers after she was carried into Milford Haven.—The court, upon great consideration, were clearly of opinion, that the loss was total by the capture; and that, after the voyage was defeated, the right which the owner had to obtain restitution of the ship and cargo, paying salvage to the recaptors, might be abandoned to the insurers, after she was brought into Milford Haven.—Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion of the court. The decision of the first point has been already mentioned in its proper place (a). Upon the second point, his lordship said,—“The single question upon which this case turns, is, whether the insured had, under all the circumstances, an election to abandon on the 18th of January. The loss and disability were in their nature total at the time they happened. During eight days the plaintiff was entitled to be paid by the insurer, as for a total loss; and, in the case of a recapture, the insurer would have stood in his place. The subsequent recapture is, at best, a saving only of a small part: Half the value must be paid for salvage. The disability to pursue the voyage still continued. The master and mariners were prisoners. The charter-party was dissolved. The freight, except in the proportion of the goods saved, was lost. The ship was necessarily brought into an English port. What could be saved might not be worth the expence necessarily attending it. The subsequent title to restitution arising from the recapture, at a great expence (b), of a ship disabled from pursuing her

A title to restitution arising from recapture, cannot take away a vested right to abandon, if the ship be not fit to perform the voyage.

(a) Sup. 120. (b) By 39 G. II. c. 34, § 2, a moiety of the value of the captured ship was given to privateers, if the prize was above 60 hours in the possession of the enemy. But now by 43 G. III. c. 160, § 39, the salvage in all cases of recapture, by privateers, is fixed at 10 per cent.

voyage,

voyage, cannot take away a right vested in the insured at the time of the capture. But, because he cannot recover for any more than the loss he has sustained, he must abandon what may be saved. The better opinion of the books says, Sufficit semel extitisse condit. nem. ad beneficium assessoratori, de amissione navis; etiam quod postea recuperetur recuperatio: Nam per talem recuperationem non poterit præjudicari assessoratio (a). I cannot find a single book, ancient or modern, which does not say that, in case of a ship being taken, the insured may demand as for a total loss and abandon. What proves the proposition most strongly is, that by the general law, he may abandon in the case merely of arrest, or an embargo, by a prince not an enemy (b). Positive regulations in different countries, have fixed a precise time before the insured should, in that case, be at liberty to abandon. The fixing a precise time proves the general principle. Every argument holds strongly in the case of the other policy, with regard to the goods. The cargo was, in its nature, perishable, destined from Newfoundland to Spain or Portugal; and the voyage was as absolutely defeated, as if the ship had been wrecked, and a third or fourth of the goods saved. No capture by the enemy can be so total a loss as to leave no possibility of recovery. If the owner himself should retake at any time, he will be entitled; and by the stat. 29 G. II. c. 34, § 24, if an English ship retake at any time, before the condemnation or after, the owner is entitled to restitution, upon stated salvage. This chance does not suspend the demand upon the insurer for a total loss: But justice is done by putting him in the place of the insured, in case of a recapture. In questions on policies, the nature of the contract, as an indemnity and nothing else, is always liberally considered. There might be circumstances, under which a capture would be but a small temporary hindrance to the voyage; perhaps none at all: As if a ship were taken, and, in a few days, escaped entire, and pursued her voyage. There are circumstances

The insured may abandon upon a mere arrest or embargo by a prince not an enemy.

But for the capture, the salvage is given by a small temporary hindrance.

(a) Receit, p. 46. (b) Vid. sup. ch. 12, § 5.

The insured is in no case obliged to abandon.

And he cannot, merely by abandoning, turn a partial into a total loss.

under which it would be deemed an average loss: If a captured ship be immediately ransomed (a) by the master, and pursue her voyage: there the money paid is an average loss. And in all cases the insured may chuse not to abandon (b). In the second part of the usages and customs of the sea, (a translation from the French), a treatise is inserted called Le Guidon, in which, after mentioning the right to abandon upon a capture, it is added, "or any other such disturbance as defeats the voyage; or makes it not worth while, or not worth the freight, to pursue it (c)." I know that, in late times, the privilege of abandoning has been restrained for fear of letting in frauds: And the merchant cannot elect to turn what, at the time when it happened, was in its nature, but an average loss, into a total one, by abandoning. But there is no danger of fraud in the present case. The loss was total at the time it happened; and continued total, as to the destruction of the voyage. Nothing could be recovered, but upon payment of more than half the value, including the costs. What could be saved of the goods might not be worth the freight for so much of the voyage as they had gone when they were taken. The cargo, from its nature, must have been sold where it was brought in. The loss, as to the ship, could not be estimated, nor the salvage of half be fixed, by a better measure than a

(a) Since this judgment was delivered, the ransoming of ships captured by the enemy has been prohibited by stat. 22 G. III. c. 35. sup. 504.—(b) Le Guidon, ch. 7, art. 1, says that abandonment depends on the will of the insured, who may resort to it as an extreme remedy.—(c) The passage in Le Guidon to which his lordship alludes, c. 7, § 1, is in these words: "Il est en liberté au marchand chargeur faire delais à ses assureurs, c'est à dire, quitter et délaisser ses droits, noms, raisons, et actions, de la propriété qu'il a en la marchandise chargée, dont il est assuré, lors, et quand il advoient naufrage du tout ou de partie, ou bien avarie qui excède ou endommage la moitié de la marchandise, quand il a prise d'amis ou d'ennemis, arrest de prince, ou autre tel distourbier en la navigation; ou telle empirance en la marchandise, qu'il n'y ait moyen l'avoir fait naviger à son dernier reste, ou qu'elle ne valut le fret, ou peu de chose d'avantage."

fale.

sale. In such a case, there is no colour to say that the insured might not disentangle himself from unprofitable trouble and further expence, and leave the insurer to save what he could. It might as well be argued that if a ship which had sunk, was weighed up again at a great expence, the crew having perished, the insured could not abandon, nor the insurer be liable, because the body of the ship was saved."

In the above case Lord Mansfield declared, "that he could not find a single book, ancient or modern, which did not say that, in case of a ship being taken, the insured may demand as for a total loss, and abandon."—The unqualified terms in which this is expressed, soon gave rise to a notion that the immediate consequence of a capture was a change of property in the thing insured, and that this gave the insured a vested right to a total loss, with liberty to abandon when he pleased; and that this right could not be divested by any subsequent event.—That Lord Mansfield did not mean to be thus understood is obvious from the whole of his judgment in that case: But another case soon after occurred which afforded him an opportunity of explaining his own meaning in that judgment, and of ascertaining and settling those principles of law which have governed all the cases to which they were applicable, from that time to the present.

In this case it was settled, after solemn argument, and upon great consideration, that if the thing insured be recovered before any loss is paid, the insured can only be entitled to a total or a partial loss, according to the final event. This agrees with Roccus who puts this question:—Affecurator qui jam solvit æstimationem mercium deperditorum, si postea dictæ merces appareant et recuperatæ sint, an possit cogere dominum ad accipiendas illas, et ad reddendum sibi æstimationem quam dedit?—To this question he answers thus: Distingue: Aut merces aut aliqua pars ipsarum appareant, et restitui possint ante solutionem æstimationis; et tunc tenetur dominus mercium illas recipere, et pro illa parte mercium apparentium liberabitur affecurator: Nam qui tenetur ad certam quantitatem respectu certæ speciei, dando illam, liberatur. Et etiam, quia contractus affecurationis est conditionalis, scilicet, si merces deperdantur: Non autem dicuntur deperditæ, si postea reperiantur. Verum, si merces non appareant

It is not because a ship has once been captured, that the insured may abandon at any time afterwards.

If the thing insured be recovered before any loss is paid, the insured is only entitled to a partial or a total loss, according to the final event.

in illa pristina bonitate, aliter fit aestimatio; non in totum, sed prout tunc valent. Aut vero post solutam aestimationem ab assurecuratore compareant merces, et tunc est in electione mercium assurecurati, vel recipere merces vel retinere pretium (a).

Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Bur. 1198, 1 Bl. 276.

A ship is captured, and all the hands but the mate and another man taken out of her. After 17 days, she is recaptured and sent into an English port, where she arrives a month after the capture.—The voyage not being lost, the insured shall not be allowed to abandon after the ship's arrival.

The case above alluded to, was an insurance on the ship Selby, valued at 1200*l.* and goods on board, from Virginia to London.—The ship sailed on the 28th of March 1769, from Virginia for London, and on the 6th of May was captured by a French privateer. The captain and six men were taken out of the ship, and only the mate and one man left on board. The French put a prize-master and several men on board to carry the ship to France; but in the way thither, she was retaken on the 23d of May and sent into Plymouth, where she arrived the 6th of June. The plaintiff, at Hull, as soon as he was informed of what had befallen his ship, wrote on the 23d of June to his agent in London, with directions to abandon.—The agent, on the 26th of June, acquainted the defendant with the offer to abandon, to which the defendant answered, 'that he did not think himself bound to take to the ship, but was ready to pay the salvage, and all other losses and charges that the plaintiff had sustained by the capture.'—On the 19th of August the ship, which had sustained no damage by the capture, was brought to London by order of the owners of the cargo and the recaptors, and the whole cargo delivered to the freighters, who paid the freight without prejudice.—The question on this case was, whether the plaintiff, on the 26th of June, had a right to abandon, and to recover as for a total loss?—The court determined that he had no right to abandon, and that he could recover as for a partial loss only.—Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court said,—“The plaintiff has averred in his declaration, as the basis of his demand for a total loss, that, by the capture, the ship became wholly lost to him. The general question is, whether the plaintiff, who, at the time of his action brought, at the time of his offer to abandon, and at the time of his being first apprized of any accident having happened, had only, in truth, sustained a partial loss, ought to recover as for a total loss. In support of the affirmative, the counsel for the plaintiff insisted upon the four following points: 1. That, by the capture, the property was changed, and therefore the loss total for ever; 2. That if the property was not changed, yet the capture was a total loss; 3. That when the ship was brought into Plymouth, particularly on the 26th of June, the recovery was not such as, in truth, changed the total into an average loss; 4. That, supposing it did, yet the loss having once been total, a right vested in the insured to recover the whole, upon abandoning; which right could never afterwards be divested, or taken from him, by any subsequent event.—As to the first point: If the change of property was at all material, as between the insurer and the insured, it would not be applicable to the present case; because, by the marine law received and practised in England, there is no change of property, in the case of a capture, till condemnation; and now by the act of parliament (a), in case of a recapture, the jus postliminii continues for ever. Many writers argue, between the insurer and the insured, from the distinction, whether the property was, or was not, so changed by the capture, as to transfer a complete right from the enemy to a recaptor, or neutral vendee, against the former owner. But arbitrary notions concerning the change of property by capture, as between the former owner and recaptor or vendee, ought never to be the rule of decision, as between the insurer and insured, upon a contract of indemnity, contrary to the real truth of the fact. And therefore I agree, upon the second point, that, by the capture, while it continued, the ship was totally lost; but it must be admitted that the property, in case of recapture, never was changed, but returned to the former owner.—The third point depends, as every question of this kind must, upon the particular circumstances. It does not necessarily follow, that, because there is a recapture, therefore the loss ceases to be total. If the voyage be absolutely lost, or not worth pursuing: If the sal-

The property is not changed by capture, till condemnation. But now the jus postliminii continues for ever.

While the ship is in the hands of the enemy, she is considered as totally lost; but the property reverts upon a recapture.

In what cases a loss may be said to be total.

vage be very high : If further expence be necessary : If the insurer will not engage, at all events, to bear that expence, though it should exceed the value, or fail of success : Under these, and many other like circumstances, the insured may disentangle himself and abandon, notwithstanding there was a recapture. The Guidon (a), amongst other instances of a total loss, where the insured may abandon, says, “ If the damage exceed half the value of the thing insured ; or if the voyage be lost, or so interrupted that the pursuit of it is not worth the freight.” But, in the present case, the voyage was so far from being lost, that it had met with only a short temporary obstruction ; the ship and cargo were both safe ; the expence incurred did not amount to near half the value ; and when the offer was made to abandon, the insurer undertook to pay all charges and expences which the insured should be put to by the capture. The only argument to shew that the loss had not, upon the recapture, ceased to be total, was built upon a mistaken supposition, that the recaptor had a right to demand a sale, and to put a stop to any further prosecution of the voyage. But that is not so. The property returns to the owner, pledged to the recaptors for the amount of the salvage. Upon paying this he is entitled to restitution. The recaptor in this case had no right to sell the ship. If they had differed about the value, the court of admiralty would have ordered a commission of appraisement : It was the interest of all parties that the ship should forthwith proceed to London. Had the recaptor opposed it, or affected delay, the court of admiralty would have made an order for bringing her to her port of delivery, upon reasonable terms. Therefore it is clear that, on the 26th of June, the ship had sustained no other loss than a short temporary obstruction, and a charge which the defendant offered to pay.—As to the last point : The plaintiff’s demand is for an indemnity. His action, then, must be founded on the nature of his damnification, as it really was, at the time of the action brought. It is repugnant, upon a contract of indemnity,

Upon a recapture the property returns to the original owner, pledged for the salvage.

Though there have at one time been a total loss, the insured cannot abandon after the final event has determined it to be only a partial loss.

to recover as for a total loss, when the final event has determined that the damnification is, in truth, an average loss. Whatever undoes the damnification, in whole or in part, must operate upon the indemnity, in the same degree. It is a contradiction in terms to say that an action will lie for an indemnity, when, upon the whole event, no damage has been sustained."—To illustrate this, and to shew that, by the common law, the injury being repaired before the action was brought, is an answer to the action, he put the case of an action of waste brought against a tenant, after he had repaired (a); and of an action brought by a surety sued to judgment, against his principal, after the principal had paid the debt and costs, and entered satisfaction on record. He then said;—"But, in the present case, the notion of a vested right in the plaintiff to sue as for a total loss, before the recapture, is only fictitious and not founded in truth: For the insured is not obliged to abandon, in any case. He has an election. No right can vest, as for a total loss, till he has made that election. He cannot elect before advice is received of the loss; and if that advice shew the peril to be over, and the thing insured in safety, he cannot elect at all; because he has no right to abandon when the thing is safe. Writers upon the marine law are apt to embarrass general principles with the positive regulations of their own country: But they seem all to agree that, if the thing be recovered before the money is paid, the insured can only be intitled according to the final event (b).—In the case of Spencer v. Franco (c), though upon a wager policy, the loss was held not to be total, after the return of the ship in safety; though she had been seized, and long detained by the King of Spain, in a time of actual war.—In the case of Fitzgerald v. Pole (d), though upon a wager policy, the majority of the Judges, and the House of Lords, held there was no total loss; the ship having been restored before the end of the four months, the time for

There is no vested right to recover as for a total loss, till the insured, having a right to abandon, elects to do so.

If a ship be recovered after a long detention, it is not a total loss, even upon a wager policy.

(a) Vid. Co. Lit. 53, a.——(b) Vid. Roccus, Not. 50, sup. 565.——(c) Sup. 514.——(d) 5 Bro. Parl. Ca. 131, inf.

which she was insured.—The present attempt is the first that was ever made to charge the insurer, as for a total loss, upon an interest policy, after the thing was recovered: And it is said, the judgment in Goss v. Withers gave rise to it.”—Here he recapitulated the grounds of the judgment in that case (a), and proceeded thus,—“But it is said that though the case of Goss v. Withers was entirely different, some part of the reasoning warranted the proposition now inferred by the plaintiff from it. The great principle relied upon was, that, as between the insurer and insured, the contract being an indemnity, the truth of the facts ought to be regarded; and therefore there might be a total loss by a capture, which could not operate a change of property; and a recapture should not relate by fiction, like the Roman jus possimintii, as if the capture had never happened, unless the total loss was in truth recovered. This reasoning proved, à converso, that if the thing, in truth was safe, no artificial reasoning shall be allowed to set up a total loss. The words quoted at the bar were certainly used (b), ‘that there is no book, ‘ancient or modern, which does not say that, in case of ‘the ship being taken, the insured may demand as for a ‘total loss, and abandon.’ But the proposition was applied to the subject matter, and is certainly true, provided the capture, or the total loss occasioned thereby, continue to the time of abandoning, and bringing the action. The case then before the court did not make it necessary to specify all the restrictions. But I will read to you verbatim, from my notes of the judgment then delivered, what was said, to prevent any inference being drawn beyond the case then determined.”—Here he read several passages from his argument in Goss v. Withers, which is fully set forth in the foregoing account of that case, and then proceeded; —“From this way of reasoning it by no means followed, that if the ship and cargo had, by the recapture, been brought safe to the port of delivery, without having sustained any damage at all, the insured might abandon. But without dwelling longer upon principles or autho-ritical, the consequences of the present question are decisive. It is impossible that any man should desire to abandon, in a ~~particular~~ ^{particular} circumstance, ~~the~~ ^{the} present, but for one of two reasons: either because he has over-valued; or because ~~the market has fallen~~ ^{the market has fallen} below the original price. The only reason which can make it the interest of the party to ~~desire~~ ^{desire} to abandon, are conclusive against allowing it. If the valuation be true, the plaintiff is indemnified by being paid the charge he has been put to, by the capture. If he has over-valued, he will be a gainer, if he be permitted to abandon; and he can only desire it because he has over-valued. This was avowed upon the first argument; and that very reason is conclusive against its being allowed. The insurer, by the marine law, ought never to pay less, upon a contract of indemnity than the value of the loss; and the insured ought never to receive more. Therefore, if there were occasion to resort to that argument, the consequence of the determination would alone be sufficient upon the present occasion. But, upon principle, this action could not be maintained as for a total loss, if the question were to be judged by the strictest rules of the common law: Much less can it be supported for a total loss, as the question ought to be decided by the large principles of the marine law, according to the substantial intent of the contract, and the real truth of the fact. The property, and daily negotiations of merchants ought not to depend upon subtleties and niceties; but upon rules easily learned and easily retained; because they are the dictates of common sense, drawn from the truth of the case. If the question depend upon the fact, every man can judge of the nature of the loss, before the money be paid: But, if it depend upon speculative refinements, from the law of nations, or the Roman law, concerning the change, or reversion, of property; no wonder merchants are in the dark, when doctors have differed upon the subject from the beginning, and have ~~not yet~~ ^{not yet} agreed. To obviate too large an inference being drawn from this determination, I desire it may be understood, that the point here determined is, That the plaintiff upon a policy can only recover an indemnity,

A passage in the judgment of Goss v. Withers, explained.

(a) Sup. 568.—(b) Vid. sup. 569.

When the ship is safe and the voyage not lost, the insured ought not to be permitted to abandon.

The insurer ought never to pay less than the value of the loss, nor the insured receive more

The insured can only recover an indemnity for his loss at the time of the action brought, or offer to abandon.

If, after a total loss has been paid, the ship be restored, the insured shall not be obliged to refund.

according to the nature of his case, at the time of the action brought, or, at most, at the time of his offer to abandon. We give no opinion, how it would be, in case the ship and goods were restored in safety between the offer to abandon and the action brought, or between the commencement of the action and the verdict: And particularly I desire that it may not be inferred, that in case the ship or goods should be restored, after the money is paid as for a total loss, the insurer could compel the insured to refund the money and take the ship or goods. That case is totally different from the present, and depends throughout, upon different reasons and principles. Here, the event had fixed the loss to be an average loss only, before the action brought, before the offer to abandon, and before the plaintiff had notice of any accident; consequently before he could make an election. Therefore, under these circumstances, we are of opinion that he cannot recover for a total loss, but for an average loss only; the amount of which is ascertained by the jury.—The judgment must be entered up as for the average loss stated in the case; viz. 10l. per cent."

If, upon a recapture the captain sell the ship and cargo, as being the best to be done for all concerned; the insured may abandon.

The following case will shew that if, upon a recapture, the captain find that the voyage cannot be pursued, and, acting fairly for the benefit of all concerned, he sell the ship and cargo to pay the salvage, and thereby put an end to the voyage; the insured may abandon, and recover as for a total loss.

Millev. Fletcher, Doug 219.

A ship and goods are captured and recaptured, and put in possession of the captain, who disposes of both and puts an end to the voyage; and in so doing, acts to the best of his judgment for the benefit of all concerned: The insured may abandon, and demand as for a total loss.

A ship and freight were insured from Montserrat to London:—The ship was taken on her voyage on the 23d of May by two American privateers, who took the captain and all the crew, and part of the cargo, (which consisted of sugars), out of her; and also took away the rigging. She was afterwards retaken, and carried into New York, where the captain arrived on the 23d of June, and, taking possession of the ship, found that part of what had been left on board of the cargo, was washed overboard; that 57 hogsheads of what remained were damaged, and that the ship was leaky, and could not be repaired without unloading her entirely. The owners had no storehouse at New York. No sailors were to be had there; and the only method method he had of paying the salvage, was by sale of the ship or part of the cargo. He did not know of the insurance. The expence of repairing the ship would have exceeded the freight by more than 100l. There was an embargo on all vessels at New York till the 27th of December, and his ship ought to have arrived at London in July. Upon consulting with his friends at New York, he resolved to sell the ship and cargo, as the most prudent step for the interest of his employers. The cargo was accordingly sold and paid for. The ship was also contracted for; but the person who agreed to buy her ran away; and the captain left her in a creek near New York, and returned to England, where he arrived in the February following, and informed the plaintiff of what he had done. The plaintiff immediately claimed from the underwriters as for a total loss, and offered to abandon.—The underwriters resisted this claim. The insured brought an action on the policy, claiming as for a total loss. The defendant insisted that it was only an average loss.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, told the jury, that if they were satisfied that the captain had done what was best for the benefit of all concerned, they must find as for a total loss. The jury found a verdict according to this direction; and upon a motion for a new trial, the court were clearly of opinion that the plaintiff had a right to abandon, and claim as for a total loss.—Lord Mansfield said;—"On the trial of this cause, it did not appear to me that there was any question of law, and no case was asked for. It was impossible to ask for one till the facts were ascertained; and when ascertained, it would have been impossible to state them in any way which could have left a doubt on the law. It was not contended that a capture necessarily amounts to a total loss, as between insurer and insured; nor, on the other hand, that, on a capture and recapture, there may not be a total loss, though there remains some material tangible part of the ship and cargo. Neither was it contended that the captain has an arbitrary power, by his own act, to make the loss either partial or total, as he pleases. The question is simply this, whether the consequences of the capture were such as, notwithstanding the recapture, occasioned a total obstruc-

A capture does not necessarily amount to a total loss; nor does a recapture prevent its being total.

In what cases
the insured may abandon.

tion of the voyage, or only a partial stoppage, as in the case of Hamilton v. Mendez (a). In that case, and in Goss v. Withers (b), great stress was laid on the situation of the ship and cargo, at the time when the insured had notice, at the time of the offer to abandon, and at the time of the action brought. No case says, that the bare existence of the hulk of the ship prevents the loss being total. The cases where the insured may abandon are, 'If the voyage be lost; or not worth pursuing;—If the salvage be high;—If further expence be necessary;—If the insurer will not, at all events, undertake to pay that expence (c), &c.' Here, at the time of the capture, there were no hopes of a recovery; no friend's ship in sight; no means of resistance; all the crew taken out, and part of the cargo and the rigging also taken away. When the ship was retaken and brought to New York, it still continued a total loss. Neither the insured nor the insurers, had any agent in the place. The court of admiralty must have proceeded secundum equum et bonum, and might have sold her for the benefit of those concerned. When the insured first had notice and offered to abandon, and when the action was brought, it was still a total loss. The voyage was abandoned, the cargo sold, and the ship left to be sold. The only answer the defendant makes, or can make to this, is, that the loss was total, indeed, but the captain made it so by his improper conduct; for that, on his taking possession of the ship, the loss became partial, and that he ought to have pursued the voyage. But was this defence true in fact? The captain, when he came to New York, had no express order, but he had an implied authority, from both sides, to do what was right and fit to be done, as none of them had agents in the place. And for the consequences of whatever it was right for him to have done, if it had been his own ship and cargo, the underwriter must answer; because this is within the contract of indemnity. Suppose there had been no insurance, what ought the captain to have done? 1. As to the cargo: According to the course of the voyage, the ship should have arrived at London in July. On

The captain has an implied authority to do the best he can for the benefit of all concerned, and the insurer is bound by his acts.

(a) Sup. 572.—(b) Sup. 567.—(c) Vid. sup. 562.

the capture, part had been taken out, some had been washed overboard, some damaged, and the whole, from the leakiness of the vessel, in a perishable state. There were no store-houses, nor could the ship proceed in the state she was in. The crew was gone, and an embargo laid on till December. What! shall a cargo, which was intended to arrive at London in July, be kept in a perishable state at New York, in a leaky vessel, till December? 2. As to the ship: It was certainly better to sell her than to bring her to London. There was no crew belonging to her, and she had no cargo. Even if all the cargo had been left, the expence of repairs would have exceeded the freight. If she had been brought home, the expence of bringing her might have been more than what she would have sold for in London. It has been said, that the damage would not have fallen on the underwriters; but the argument drawn from thence is a fallacy, for that circumstance goes to determine it to be the interest of the insured to abandon the voyage. The question is, what did the owner suffer by the capture; and it appears that he suffered so much that it was not worth while to pursue the voyage. The whole voyage was lost. As the captain did not know of the insurance, he had no temptation to give the turn of the scale to the one side or the other. I left it to the jury to determine whether what the captain had done, was for the benefit of the concerned. If they had found that it was, in words, where would have been the question of law (a)?”

So, if the ship be sold by the captors, and the captain acting as agent for the owners, purchase the ship on their account; this shall be considered as a recovery of the ship for the owners, and the money thus paid, as salvage; and if the voyage can be prosecuted, this is only a partial, and not a total, loss.

Thus.—A ship insured for six months, was captured and carried into Charlestown, where she remained upwards

If the captain purchase the ship from the captors for account of his owners; the money paid is only a partial loss.

McMaster v. Shoolbred, 15 P. Rep. 237.

(a) In Plantamour v. Staples, sup. 169. Mr. Justice Buller adopts this doctrine; viz. that the insurers are bound by the acts of the captain, when he does what he deems best for the benefit of all concerned.

of a month, and then was sold by the captors, and purchased by the captain for account of the original owners.—In an action on the policy, the defendant paid 60l. per cent. into court, as for a partial loss.—The plaintiff contended, that the ship having been captured and sold by the captain, after she had been a month in their possession, this was a total loss.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, held that this was only to be considered as a partial loss, and that the owners could not abandon. He considered the captain as agent for the owners, recovering the vessel upon their account, and the price as a kind of salvage, the amount of which would be the loss sustained, and which only constituted an average loss. He admitted, however, that when the ship had been captured, and was carried into port, in the enemy's possession, the insured might, at that period, have abandoned. But not having abandoned till after the ship was recovered, they could now only go as for a partial loss.—The jury found a verdict according to this direction.

Having laid before the reader the authorities upon questions of abandonment upon losses by capture and arrest of princes, we will now proceed to consider,

2. Of the right of abandoning in other cases.

Shipwreck is considered as a total loss.

X

Shipwreck is generally a total loss. What may be saved of the ship or goods is so uncertain, and depends so much on accident, that the law cannot distinguish this from the absolute destruction of the whole. The wreck of the ship may remain and may be saved, but the ship is lost. A thing is said to be destroyed when it is so broken, disjointed, or otherwise injured, that it no longer exists in its original nature and essence. So, the goods may remain; but if no ship can be procured in a reasonable time, to carry them to their place of destination, the voyage is lost, and the adventure frustrated.

But a stranding is not, of itself, deemed a total loss.

But the mere stranding of the ship is not, of itself, deemed a total loss, so as to entitle the insured immediately to abandon. If, by some fortunate accident, by the exertions of the crew, or by any borrowed assistance, the ship be got off and rendered capable of continuing her voyage, voyage, it is not a total loss, and the insurers are only liable for the expences occasioned by the stranding. It is only where the stranding is followed by shipwreck, or in any other way renders the ship incapable of prosecuting her voyage, that the insured is entitled to abandon (a).

It is a rule that, to entitle the insured to abandon, there must have been, at some period of the voyage insured, or during the continuance of the risk, a total loss; and the following cases will shew that no partial loss, however great, occasioned by the perils of the sea, can be turned into a total loss.

An insurance was made on the ship Friendship from Wynburgh to Lynn.—In an action on the policy, the defendant pleaded a tender of 48l.—The plaintiff claimed as for a total loss, and upon the trial of the cause, it appeared that the ship had suffered so much in her voyage, that when she arrived at Lynn, she was not worth repairing. The damage, however, sustained by the ship, did not exceed 48l. per cent. the sum which the defendant had paid into court upon his plea of tender.—Upon this case the defendant insisted that this was a partial, and not a total, loss, and that therefore the plaintiff had no right to abandon.—The court were clearly of opinion that the owner cannot abandon, but in the case of a total loss, and that they could not determine that there had been a total loss, when the jury found that there was only a loss of 48l. per cent.—Mr. Justice Asburst said, “It will be making the insurers answerable for the goodness of the ship, if they are held liable for more than 48l. per cent. It is stated that the ship was not worth repairing; but non constat that, if the ship had not received any damage during the voyage, she would have been worth repairing: And though she was not in a sound state, yet she had been 24 hours in safety; and the jury having ascertained the amount of the damage she has sustained, I cannot say that the plaintiff ought to recover more.”—Mr. Justice Buller said, “Nothing can be better established than that the owner of a ship can only abandon in the case of a total loss, hap-

No partial loss, however great, can be turned into a total loss.

Casale v. St. Barbe, 1 T. R. 187.

A ship perished on her voyage, but was so damaged as not to be worth repairing; yet, as the damage was only estimated at 48 per cent., this is not a total loss, and the insured cannot abandon.

(a) Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 180.

pening at some period or other of the voyage; which cannot have happened in this case, as the jury have expressly found that the loss amounted to 48l. per cent. In the case of Jenkins v. Mackenzie, though the ship was brought into port, yet the capture, as between the insurer and the insured, was a total loss. The true way of considering this case is, that it was an insurance on the ship, for the voyage; and if either the ship or the voyage be lost, it will be a total loss; but here neither was lost. The case of Hamilton v. Mendez (a) is decisive."

Furneaux v. Bradley, B. R. E. 110 C. 111 Park 166

A ship, insured for six months, receives an injury within the time; and the captain being unable to get her repaired, tells her, after the time: This is only a partial loss.

Thus:—The ship Prince of Wales was insured, 'In port or at sea, for six months from the 18th of July 1777.'—She was in government service, and bound from Cork to Quebec. She arrived there; but the season being far advanced before she was ready to return, she was removed into the basin; from whence on the 19th of November she was driven by a field of ice, and damaged by running on the rocks. Her condition could not be examined into, till the April following, after the expiration of the policy. She was then found to be bulged, and much injured, but not irreparably so. In the progress of the repair, difficulties arose for want of materials; and the captain, after consulting the merchants and agent in the place, sold her. An account of the loss was made up, charging the insurers for the whole amount, and crediting them for the money for which the ship was sold, as salvage.—Lord Mansfield, at the trial, said,—“The great point in the case is, whether there be a total loss occasioned by this accident. It is a new question, upon which I shall reserve a case for the opinion of the court.”—A case being reserved, the court, after argument, were of opinion, that the ship should be considered as damaged, on the 19th of November, but not totally lost.—Lord Mansfield said, the justice of the case seemed to be that the loss in November should be taken as an average, not as a total loss.

J. Fitzgerald v. Polk, 5 Bro. Park. Cas. 1319 Willes, 641.

A privateer, insured for four months free from all risks, is

So, where the Good Fellow privateer was insured, 'At and from Jamaica on a cruise for four months, valued ‘at 1000*l.* without further account, and free from average.’

—Upon a special verdict it appeared, that while the privateer was on her cruise, and within the four months, the crew mutinied against the captain and his officers, and by force carried the ship to Jamaica, and, before her arrival there, by force, seized the boat, fire-arms, and cutlasses, carried them off, and deserted the ship, whereby the voyage and cruise were prevented and lost for the remainder of the four months; that the ship arrived at Jamaica, but not till after the end of the four months.—Upon this case the King’s Bench gave judgment for the plaintiff.—Upon a writ of error, the Exchequer Chamber unanimously reversed that judgment; and the House of Lords confirmed the judgment of reversal, being of opinion, with the majority of the judges, that the insurer, being, by the terms of the policy, free from all average, the plaintiff could not be entitled to recover but in case of a total loss; and the ship being found, by the special verdict to be in good safety, at her proper port, at and after the end of the four months, for which the insurance was made, there could be no loss (a).

If, by any accident or misfortune, the ship be prevented from proceeding on her voyage, and the voyage be thereby lost; this is a total loss, not only of the ship and freight, but also of the cargo, if no other ship can be procured to carry it to its port of destination.

Thus:—An insurance was made on the ship Grace, her cargo and freight, ‘At and from Tortola to London; warranted to depart on or before the 1st of August 1781. The ship valued at 2,470*l.* the cargo at 12,400*l.* and the freight at 2,250*l.*; at 25 guineas per cent. to return forced into port by a mutiny of the crew, but is in safety at her port after the four months are expired:—The insurer can recover for no loss;—not for an average loss, because the insurance was free from average; and not for a total loss, because it was only an average loss.

But if the voyage be lost, from whatever cause, it is a total loss.

Manning v. Newnham, B.R. Tr. 22 G. III. MS.

On a voyage from Tortola to London, the ship by sea damage is obliged to put back on the third day, and cannot be repaired there, and no other ship can be got for the cargo:—This is a total loss of the ship, freight, and cargo, and the insured may abandon.

(a) It has been said (Park, 170.) that cases like the present can never arise again, because it originated in a wager policy, which is prohibited by law.—The policy, in this case, can scarcely be said to have been a wager-policy: It was rather a valued policy, free from average: But it must be recollected that there is in the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, a proviso to exempt privateers from the operation of the first clause, which prohibits insurances interest or no interest; and therefore the policy in this case would be a good and valid policy at this day.

‘ 10 per cent. if she departed with convoy from the West Indies, and arrived; the ship, freight, and goods warranted free of particular average.’—The ship and cargo had been a Dutch prize, condemned at Tortola; but during four or five months that she staid there, was never unloaded. On the 1st of August the whole fleet of merchantmen, with their convoy, got under weigh; but not being able to get clear of the islands that day, they came to an anchor during the night, and the next day cleared the islands. About ten o’clock that day, several squalls of wind arose, which occasioned the ship to strain and make water so fast, that the pumps were obliged to be worked; and on the 3d the captain made a signal of distress, and was obliged to return to Tortola. On her arrival there, the captain made his protest; and a survey was had, by which the ship was declared unable to proceed to sea with her cargo, upon a London voyage, and that she could not be repaired in any of the English islands in the West Indies. There was no evidence of any special damage to the cargo, which was sold for a sum, within 700l. of the value. The owners purchased two-thirds of it; the greatest part of which might have been sent home and sold at a great profit. The insured claimed as for a total loss on the ship, cargo, and freight. At the trial, though the cargo was warranted free from average, yet it seemed dangerous to permit the insured to abandon, and thus turn an average into a total loss. The jury, however, thought the insured entitled to what he claimed, and found accordingly.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court, upon full consideration, were of opinion that the verdict was right and ought to stand.—Lord Mansfield said,—“ At the trial, my prejudices were in favour of the underwriters; but upon better consideration, I agree with the rest of the court that the jury did right. If, by the perils insured against, the voyage be lost and gone, it is a total loss, otherwise not. The ship received an irreparable hurt within the policy, which drove her back to Tortola, where only two ships could be had, both together not capable of taking the whole of the cargo on board. The voyage was so completely lost, that no ship could be got; and the insured were unable to send that part of the goods which they they had purchased, forward to England; and yet no body bought but to send to England. If the voyage could have been continued in another ship, there might have been freight pro rata. But it was admitted that there was a total loss on the freight, because the ship could not perform her voyage; and the insured were not to wait till ships could be had. The same argument applies to the ship and cargo. This is a contrast of indemnity, and the insurance is that the ship shall come to London. Introducing nice distinctions is inconvenient and dangerous. Upon turning this case in every view, the court are of opinion that the voyage was totally lost; and this is the ground of our determination."

But though the voyage be lost, yet, if this have not been occasioned by the happening of any of the perils insured against, it will not be a loss within the policy. As if, in the course of the voyage, the captain be informed that the port of destination is in the hands of the enemy, or shut against ships of his nation, this will afford no ground for the insured to abandon (a), and though the cargo, being of a perishable nature, is lost in consequence of the disappointment (b).

It can only be upon a loss expressly within the policy.

If a cargo be damaged in the course of the voyage, and it appear that what has been saved is less in value than the amount of the freight; this is clearly a total loss. This doctrine is warranted not only by the passage from Le Guidon which has been already cited, but also by the opinion of Lord Mansfield in the case of Goss v. Withers (c), and by that of Lord Hardwicke in the following case.

If a cargo be damaged so as to be reduced in value to less than the freight, it will be a total loss.

An action was brought on a policy upon corn for 200 l. but of the value of 217 l., the defendant having suffered judgment to go by default, upon the execution of a writ of enquiry, before Lord Hardwicke, C. J. it appearing that the corn, being damaged, was sold for only Bayfield v. Brown, at N. P. 2 Str. 1063.

(a) Per Lord Ellenborough at N. P. in Lubbeck v. Rowcroft, sup. 220.—(b) R. Hadkinson v. Robinson, sup. 218.
—(c) Vid. sup. 567.

67 l., and the freight came to 80 l.—Upon this, the question was, whether, as the freight exceeded the salvage, this was not to be considered as a total loss. For the plaintiff it was insisted that he ought not to be in a worse situation than if his corn had gone to the bottom; for then he would have had no freight to pay; but now that the voyage has been performed, whereby freight is become due, he has a right to apply the salvage to discharge it. It was proved to be the usage, that, where the salvage exceeds the freight, to deduct the freight out of the salvage, and make up the loss upon the difference.—For the defendant it was insisted that, as his insurance was upon the corn, and the whole did not perish, he ought, in making up the loss, to deduct the salvage: But no instance could be shewn, on either side, of an adjustment where the freight exceeded the salvage.—The Chief Justice was of opinion that, within the reason of deducting the freight, where the salvage exceeds it, the plaintiff, in this case, where it fell short, was intitled to have it considered as a total loss. The jury found according to this direction (a).

In what case the insured may abandon by the law of France.

In France the distinction is this: In case of shipwreck, the insured may abandon, though the goods be recovered and carried to their place of destination, because goods thus saved are generally in a bad and unmarketable condition. But if the ship become unnavigable, the insured cannot abandon the goods, if by any other ship they may be conveyed in time to their place of destination (b).

(a) This case was before the year 1749, when the common memorandum was introduced into policies, that corn, &c. should be free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded. Vid. Mason v. Scurray, sup. 226. where, in a similar case, Lord Mansfield held it to be but a partial loss, for which, as that case was upon a policy with the common memorandum, the insurer was not liable.—(b) Emerig. tom. 2. p. 187, 188.

Sect. II.

Within what Time the insured may abandon.

IF by any of the perils insured against, the ship and cargo be lost for a time, or the voyage be lost, so as to afford no present prospect of saving the one, or prosecuting the other with effect, this, while it lasts, amounts to a total loss, and the insured may abandon; but he is not, as we have already seen (a), in any case, bound to abandon. He may chuse whether he will take what can be saved, and demand as for a partial loss, or abandon, and claim as for a total loss. A loss may be total in its nature, and such that no subsequent event can render it partial; another, which at first shall be deemed total, may, by subsequent events, become partial. If the insured, while he has a right to consider the loss as total, elect to abandon, this will fix the nature of the loss; and no subsequent event can render it partial. It seems reasonable and necessary, therefore, that some time should be fixed when the degree of responsibility of the underwriter should be ascertained. The insured must not, by treating the accident for a time as a partial loss, take the chance of making the best of it for himself; and when he finds that it will not answer, attempt, by abandoning, to turn it into a total loss. In several maritime states on the continent, positive regulations have been established, limiting the time, after a loss has happened, within which the insured may abandon. In France, Spain, and Holland, the times are limited by law, according to the distance of the place where the loss happens, within which the abandonment must be made (b).

But the times thus limited must often prove either too long or too short, and frequently occasion great loss and

Some time should be fixed when the degree of the insurer's responsibility should be ascertained.

In England, the insured, as soon as he is informed of a total loss, must elect to abandon or not. If he mean to abandon, he must give reasonable notice to the insurers; otherwise he will waive his right to abandon.

(a) Sup. 564.—(b) Vid. Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 48, 49; 2 Mag. 416.

inconvenience either to the insured or the insurer. In England we have no such positive regulation, nor any time limited by law for abandoning: Our courts have laid down a rule, which seems better suited to the practice of commerce, and more likely to prevent frauds than those we have just alluded to. This rule is, that as soon as the insured receives advice of a total loss, he must make his election whether he will abandon or not: If he determine to abandon, he must give the underwriters notice of 'this within a reasonable time after the intelligence arrives; and any unnecessary delay in giving this notice will amount to a waiver of his right to abandon; for unless the owner do some act, signifying his intention to abandon, it will be only a partial loss, whatever may be the nature of the case, or the extent of the damage (a); unless, indeed, it be in effect total. This rule, which has been long established, is analogous to the general principle of the common law, which requires that all notices of acts, affecting the interests of third persons, shall be given within a reasonable time. In the following case this doctrine was first explicitly laid down by the court of King's Bench.

Mitchell v. Edie,
1 T. R. 608.

A ship being taken, the captor takes out her stores and part of her crew, and sets her at liberty: This obliging her to return into the nearest port, her voyage is lost, and her cargo, which is insured, is sold by an agent who becomes insolvent.—But, after three years, in which the insured adopts the acts of the agent, he shall not be at liberty to abandon, and throw the loss occasioned by the failure of the agent on the underwriters.

Goods were insured, 'from Jamaica to London.'—

The ship was captured by an American privateer; and, in a few days afterwards, the captor, having stripped her of her stores and part of her rigging, and having taken out some of her hands, set her at liberty. There was a clause in the policy to exempt the underwriters from average losses under 3 per cent.: And the part of her cargo taken out did not amount to that sum. In consequence of the ship's losing a part of her crew, it became impossible for her to pursue her voyage, and she was obliged to bear away for Charlestown, where she was put into the hands of one Cruden, a part owner, who sold the cargo, but remitted none of the money home. In his books, he gave the underwriters credit for the amount. At the time of the sale he was in bad circumstances, and afterwards became insolvent. It appeared, however, that the other owners looked to Cruden for two or three years for payment; during all which time, no notice of abandoning was given by the insured to the underwriters. In an action on the policy, the defendant paid a sum of money into court, being the amount of the average loss.—Two questions were made at the trial: First, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as for a total loss. Upon this, Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, was of opinion that, as there had been a capture, which for a time had occasioned a total loss, the owners had an option to abandon, or not, as they pleased; But, if they had chosen to abandon, they ought to have done it immediately, upon receiving intelligence of the loss; and, as they had not done so, but had looked to Cruden, as their agent, for payment, they had waived their right to abandon, and could only recover as for a partial loss. The second question arose out of the particular circumstances of the case, not properly belonging to this branch of the subject, and, indeed, of no general importance. The jury found a verdict for the defendant.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court (a) were clearly of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.—Mr. Justice Asburst said;—"The general rule is, that where any part of the property insured has been saved, the insured cannot recover as for a total loss, unless he make his election to abandon, and give reasonable notice to the underwriters of his intention. But it is contended that the insured never wave their right to abandon while they are managing in the best manner they can for the benefit of all concerned: And that argument is grounded on the common clause inserted in every policy, whereby the insured is authorised, 'to sue, labour and travail, in and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the goods, &c., without prejudice to the insurance.' Now this clause does not warrant the position to the extent contended for. The meaning of

(a) Per Buller, J. 1 T. R. 616.

He might have abandoned, but he ought to have done so immediately on receiving intelligence of the loss. Not having done so, he gives credit to the agent.

The meaning of the clause in the policy which enables the insured to labour for the recovery of the goods without prejudice to the insurance.

(a) Mr. Justice Asburst and Mr. Justice Buller.

The insured is bound to decide and give notice of his decision the first opportunity.

If he neglect this, he adopts the acts of the agent.

If the captain be continued in the management after such notice to the underwriters, he becomes their agent.

it is, that, till the insured have been informed of what has happened, and have had an opportunity of exercising their own judgment, no act done by the master shall prejudice their right of abandoning: And this is reasonable, because the loss may happen at a great distance, so that the insured cannot exercise their judgment immediately: It is therefore necessary that the master, who is on the spot, should do the best he can. But the insured are bound to decide, and signify their election to the underwriters the first opportunity; for though the person who takes upon him to act on the occasion for the benefit of all concerned, is not the agent of the insured, yet if, upon receiving notice of the loss, they do not elect to abandon, they adopt the acts of such person, and make him their agent. This is something like the notice that is to be given to the drawer of a bill of exchange, in case of non-payment, which, if the holder omit to do, he is considered as giving credit to the acceptor, and therefore the loss, if any, must fall on him. There may be cases where the acts of the captain may not make him the agent of either party; and then he only acts in common for them both, till notice is received by the parties at home. If, after such notice, he be continued in the agency, he becomes the agent of the party by whom he is so confirmed: But he cannot be considered as the agent of the underwriters, till notice has been given to them, and they have had an opportunity of exercising their discretion, whether they will or will not continue him; though, till notice of the loss was first received by the insured, the property continued at the risk of the underwriters. Here, Cruden for near three years was considered by the insured as their agent; credit was given to him in that character; frequent applications were made to him for payment; and, till his insolvency, there was no appearance of any intention to disown him: That was the first moment when the insured thought of abandoning.—Mr. Justice Buller said; —“ It is true that the insured are not bound to abandon: On the contrary, all the cases have said that where they are entitled to abandon, they have the option to do so or not; but unless they do elect to abandon, it is only an average loss.—The only point to be considered is, whether this doctrine will be productive of any uncertainty: If it would, that would be a sufficient reason, in a new case, for not adopting it. But, in my opinion, a contrary decision would be productive of infinite uncertainty; for it would leave open a very vague question, namely, what time the insured should be allowed to abandon. If it can extend to three years, there is no reason why it should not extend to a much longer period: But no uncertainty can follow from this determination; for our opinion is, that when the account of a loss has reached the insured, they must make their election whether they will abandon or not: If they do, they must give notice of their intention, to the underwriters, within a reasonable time. If they act otherwise, they cannot be permitted, at any subsequent period to change a partial into a total loss."

In the following case the above principles were adopted and enforced by Lord Kenyon; and, indeed, they have ever since been received and acted upon as clear law.

Goods were insured, 'At and from London to Jamaica.'—The ship was taken by a French privateer within a few leagues of Jamaica. Part of the property insured was taken out of the ship. The captain, boatswain, and all but seven men, were also taken out of her. In a fortnight after, as the captors were proceeding to America, the ship, with the remainder of her cargo, was retaken by an English frigate, and sent into Antigua; and both were sold there under a decree of the vice-admiralty court, by a prize agent, who received the proceeds to be paid over to the concerned, deducting one eighth for salvage, according to the then late prize act (a). The capture and recapture were entered at Lloyd's on the 15th of February 1795; but it was not known whither the ship was carried till the 30th of March, when a letter was received at Lloyd's, addressed to the owners, freighters, and underwriters, from the judge of the vice-admiralty court at Allwood v. Henkel, at N. P.

B. R. after Mich.
1795 Park 172.

A recaptured ship is carried into a distant port, and there sold for the benefit of all concerned; and the insured give directions to the agent to have the proceeds remitted to them; but afterwards, and four months after they had notice of the loss, they give notice of abandonment.—This is too late.

(a) 33 G. III. c. 66.

Antigua, informing them of the arrival of the ship, and of the sale of the ship and cargo, under a decree of the court; and desiring to have some agent appointed to remit the proceeds to England. Powers of attorney were sent out in April by the insured, for this purpose, with orders to remit the proceeds to the banking-house of Smith, Payne and Smith, one of whom was agent to the insured. —It was objected on the part of the defendant, that although the insured as well as the insurers were informed of the loss in the beginning of April; yet the insured did not abandon till August, near four months after the power of attorney had been sent out to Antigua. To this it was answered that, the property having been absolutely sold, and converted into money, before the insured knew where the ship was taken to; the loss was total in its nature, and therefore there was no occasion to abandon.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, inclined to think that an abandonment was necessary, and that the case was the same as if the property had not been sold, but remained in specie at Antigua. But he gave no decided opinion on this point. He said the insured were not bound to abandon in any case; and might, in case the sales had been very advantageous, have taken the benefit of them, in the same manner as they might have returned the property, if it had remained in specie. But the insured must make his election speedily, whether he will abandon or not, and put the underwriter in a situation to do what is necessary for the preservation of the property whether sold or unsold: “He cannot,” said his lordship, “lie by, and treat the loss as an average loss, and take measures for the recovery of it, without communicating that fact to the underwriters, and letting them know that the property is abandoned to them.” —There was a verdict for the plaintiff for a partial loss.

The insured must make his election speedily.

He must not first treat the loss as partial, and then abandon.

Anderson and another v Roy, Ex. Assur 7 East, 38

Wheat is insured from Waterford to Liverpool. The ship is

So, where a quantity of wheat was insured, from Waterford to Liverpool, ‘free from all average unless general, or otherwise specially agreed.’ The ship, on the 28th of January, in proceeding down the river, from Waterford, struck upon a rock and immediately filled with water; and

and to prevent her from sinking, she was run on shore, where she remained four weeks, with her hull under water at high water every tide, and could not be got off till her cargo was taken out. All the wheat was damaged; about two thirds of it were taken out, and kiln-dried at Waterford; part of the remainder was sold to feed hogs, and the residue thrown overboard as useless. The clear proceeds of the quantity saved amounted to 95l. 13s. 4d. which were remitted to the insured at Liverpool, who, on the 18th of February 1804, twenty-one days after the accident, gave notice of abandonment at London.—Upon this case there was a verdict for the plaintiff for a total loss, deducting the salvage.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court expressed an opinion that, as there is a constant intercourse between Waterford and Liverpool, where the insured reside, the abandonment was too late (a).—But it appearing by affidavit that the insured received notice of the loss at Liverpool on the 2d of February, and that this was communicated to the defendants on the 4th, with an offer to abandon, which they refused; and being now called upon to admit this as a fact in the case, they refused, upon which a new trial was granted.

stranded near Waterford. The insured reside at Liverpool, and the underwriters at London. Notice of abandonment three weeks after the accident is too late.

So, if a ship be insured for part of her value, and being captured, the insured demand as for a total loss, which the underwriters are willing to pay, on having an assignment of one fourth part of the ship from the owner, by way of abandonment; but the insured refuse this, because the one fourth of the ship is of greater value than the sum insured; and the insured, instead of abandoning, repurchased the ship from the enemy:—In this case, he is not entitled to recover as for a total loss, nor having abandoned; nor can he recover the sum paid for the repurchase of the ship, that being an illegal contract, and not only a trading with the enemy,

If the underwriters demand an abandonment of more than they have insured, this need not prevent the insured from abandoning to the amount of the sum insured: But if he neglect this, he shall not afterwards recover as for a total loss.

(a) Lord Ellenborough said he rather conceived that it was the province of the judge to direct the jury, as to what is a reasonable time, under the circumstances.

but also a ransom, within the meaning of the ransom act.

Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 268.

A British ship is captured, and carried into a neutral port, and there condemned by the enemy's consul: If the insured do not abandon, but repurchase the ship sold under the sentence, he shall not recover as for a total loss: the property never having been out of him by the condemnation; nor shall he recover the sum paid for the repurchase, that being a ransom, and illegal.

Thus:—The ship Themis was insured for twelve months, and sailed on the 4th of April 1797, on a voyage from Shields to Riga; was captured on the 7th of April by a French privateer, and carried into Bergen in Norway, where, on the 17th of April, she was condemned by a sentence of the French Consul there.—News of this being brought to England, by the captain, the plaintiff demanded a total loss from the underwriters, on which he received a letter from their broker, informing him that they were ready to settle with him, he first making an assignment of one fourth part of the ship to the broker for their benefit; and that if the plaintiff had any thoughts of repurchasing the ship, the underwriters would have no objection to pay their quota of the price.—The sum insured not amounting to one fourth of the value of the ship (a), the plaintiff declined making the assignment.—There were frequent instances of this sort of condemnation in the port of Bergen during this war, which were made with the knowledge of the Danish government, who received duties thereon, and on the sales in consequence of them. On the 13th of July 1798, the ship was sold by public auction, by the officer appointed by the court of Denmark for such sales, and was purchased for the plaintiff, by his agent at Bergen, for the sum of 1628 l. 8 s. 4 d., which was her fair value. The ship being then repaired, instead of proceeding to Riga sailed to Petersburgh and afterwards returned to England.—In an action upon this policy, the defendant paid 30 l. 11 s. 3 d. per cent. into court, and upon the trial there was a verdict for the plaintiff as for a total loss, subject to the opinion of the court on a case which stated the above facts.—The questions for the opinion of the court were, 1st, Whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover as for a total loss, or only for a partial loss. 2dly, If for a partial loss only, then, whether the sum paid for the purchase was to be included, in which case a nonsuit was to be entered.—It was contended on the part of the plaintiff, that he was entitled to recover as for a total loss, on the ground that the ship was captured by an enemy, and condemned by a court of competent jurisdiction: But the court expressing a decided opinion that no French court of admiralty could legally be holden in Denmark, adopting the decision in our court of admiralty, in the case of the ship Flad Oyen (a), that point was abandoned as untenable.—It was then insisted, 1st, That when the ship was captured, the plaintiff had a right to abandon, and did in fact abandon; and 2dly, That at least the plaintiff was entitled to recover as for a partial loss, in which was to be included the sum paid for the repurchase of the ship.—On the part of the defendant it was answered, 1st, That whatever right the insured might have had to abandon at one time, he ought to have made his election to do so, immediately after the capture; but he refused to transfer his right to the insurer, and therefore he could not say that he was ready to abandon; and, 2dly, That if this was only a partial loss, the price paid for the repurchase of the ship ought not to be included in it, that being a void contract, not only by the ransom act (b), but also by the common law, on the ground of its being a trading with the enemy.—The court determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on either of these grounds.—They declined giving any opinion on the question, whether the contract at Bergen was void, on the ground of its being a trading with the enemy, as that question would shortly come before the court upon a writ of error, in the case of Potts v. Bell (c). The only question then remaining was that relative to the ransom. Upon this they were clearly of opinion, that the transaction above stated amounted to a ransom; that the money paid by the plaintiff to regain the possession of his ship was illegally paid; and consequently that it could not constitute a charge on the underwriter.

(a) It does not appear, by the report of this case, whether the insurance was upon one fourth of the ship, or that the sum insured amounted to what the underwriters deemed a fourth.

(a) Vid. sup. 389.— (b) Vid. sup. 585.— (c) In that case it has since been determined, upon great consideration, that any trading by a British subject with the enemy, without the King's licence, is illegal, and that a policy on goods bought from the enemy is void. Vid. sup. 87.

When the purchase of a captured ship shall be deemed a ransom.

But if the insurers prevent the abandonment, they shall pay the whole loss.

But if, by any interference of the underwriters, the insured be actually prevented from abandoning, the underwriters are liable for all the loss sustained by the insured to the extent of the sum insured.

Da C Pa v. Newnham, 2 T. R. 407.

A total loss having happened, the insured proposes to abandon, but is dissuaded from it by the underwriters, who order the ship to be repaired, but afterwards refuse to pay for the repairs, and the ship is, on this account, obliged to be sold.—The insurers are liable for all the loss sustained, to the amount of the sum insured.

As, where a ship was insured 'from Leghorn to London, with liberty to touch at Nice.'—The ship met with an accident in the course of her voyage, and was obliged to put into Nice to repair. Advice of this was transmitted to the owner, who was informed that it would be necessary to unload, by which a considerable expence must be incurred. This he communicated to the underwriters, and expressed a desire to abandon. Some altercation arose; they insisted on the vessel's being repaired, and telling him to pay the bills. He at last consented to this; but refused to advance any money; in consequence of which it became necessary to take up a large sum on bottomry. The ship was refitted and resumed her voyage, and gained freight afterwards. Upon her arrival at London, application was made to the underwriters, to take up the bottomry bond, which they refused, and the vessel was obliged to be sold, to satisfy that debt, so that she never was in the possession of the insured again. The sum due upon the bottomry bond was 678 l., and the ship sold for 630 l.—Under these circumstances, Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, was of opinion, and it was so agreed at the trial and not afterwards disputed, that there had not been a total loss at Nice; for though the plaintiff offered, and was entitled, to abandon, yet, in truth, he had not abandoned. This, therefore, was considered only as a partial loss.—But Mr. Justice Buller, at the trial, and the court afterwards, determined, that the underwriters were answerable for all the injury that had accrued to the owner in consequence of their interference, and directions, and their subsequent refusal to discharge the the bottomry bond; that in consequence of this, the ship never came free to the owner's hands, but was obliged to be sold, and therefore the underwriters were liable to the amount of the insurance.

In a former chapter it was shewn that if no intelligence be received of a ship within a reasonable time, it shall be presumed that she foundered at sea (a). When the time has elapsed which affords that presumption, the insured may abandon and claim as for a total loss.

If the ship be not heard of in a reasonable time, the insured may abandon.

Sect. III.

Of the Form of the Abandonment.

IN the preceding section we have seen that, as soon as the insured is informed of a total loss, he must make his election whether he will abandon or not. If he determine to abandon, and demand as for a total loss, he is not obliged, as in some foreign countries, to make a formal protest (b), but merely to give notice of the loss to the underwriters, and of his determination to abandon.

Notice of abandonment.

It is singular that an abandonment is not made in any particular form, or accompanied by any of those solemnities which such an act would seem to require. In cases of importance, however, it is not unusual for the insured, upon payment of the loss, to make a formal assignment by deed to the underwriters, or to trustees for the use of all who may be concerned in the salvage. But, in whatever form an abandonment is declared, it must be explicit, and is not to be taken as matter of inference from an equivocal act.

There is no particular form of an abandonment.

Therefore, where a letter to the insured, stating that the ship had been forced on shore, and a quantity of Thelluson v. Fletcher, 1 E.P. Rep. 72, sup. 129.

(a) Vid. sup. ch. 12, § 1. p. 488. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 181.—

—(b) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 126. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 190.

The insured in form the determination that the ship has occurred, and the goods salvaged.

and the underwriters desire the insured to do the best they can with the goods; this will not turn a partial into a total loss.

sugars damaged, was shown by the broker to the underwriters; and they, by way of answer, desired, 'that the insured would do the best they could with the injured property';—It was insisted that this letter amounted to an abandonment, and that the answer of the underwriters was an assent to it.—But Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, said, that as this was but a partial loss, the insured could not, by their own act, turn it into a total one. That it was the interest of the underwriters, and the duty of the insured, to make a partial loss as light as possible; and that this was the meaning and import of the letter, and of the answer of the underwriters.

There must be some notice of it.

This notice of abandonment may be given, either to the underwriter himself, or to the agent who has subscribed for him. And this is necessary though the ship and cargo were sold and converted into money before the notice of the loss was received (a).

If the insurance be entire, the insured cannot abandon for part only.

In general, the abandonment ought to be made for the whole of the effects insured, and not for a particular part; as if part be rotten, the insured cannot abandon that part only and retain the rest, but he must abandon the whole or nothing; for the contract being entire, cannot be severed (b).—Thus, if I have divers sorts of goods on board a ship; as sugars, indigo, and cotton; and I insure 1000 l. on the whole, without any distinction; this insurance is entire, and I cannot abandon my sugars, and retain my indigo and cotton (c).

But if different articles be separately insured, or separately valued, any one may be abandoned.

But if I insure these articles by different policies; or if, in the same policy, they be separately valued, I may abandon any one article, and retain the rest; because these are, in effect, distinct insurances, though in the same policy (d).—So, if I insure a ship and cargo, distinguishing how much for the one, and how much for the other; and the ship in the course of the voyage be condemned, as incapable of proceeding further; I may abandon for the ship, and not for the cargo (a). But if I insure the ship and cargo for one entire sum, and the ship be stranded, I cannot retain the goods, and abandon the ship (b).

(a) Hodgson v. Blackiston, at N. P. after Hil. 38 G. III. Park 172.— (b) Vid. Valin on art. 47, h. t. p. 102.— (c) Valin ubi sup. Pothier, h. t. n. 131.— (d) Valin, ut sup. Pothier, n. 132.

The abandonment must be simple and unconditional; otherwise it will not transfer the entire property to the insurers, which must at all events be done, for this is of the essence of the abandonment. If therefore I abandon a captured ship, on condition that, in case she be released, she shall continue my property, and I shall repay with interest the sum which the insurers shall have paid me,—such an abandonment would be void (c).

It must be unconditional.

Sect. IV.

Of the Effect of an Abandonment.

BY the abandonment, the insured, as we have already observed, yields up to the insurers, all his right, title, and interest in the ship or goods insured, or what may be saved of them, which, from the notice of abandonment, become the property of the insurers (d). It operates as a transfer to them, in proportion to their respective subscriptions, without any regard to the priority of the policies, if more than one (e); and though the ship or goods should appear, by the several policies, to be over-insured (f). And this transfer has a sort of retrospective relation in reference to the insurers, who, to the extent of the sum insured, are presumed to have been, from the beginning, owners of the things insured (g), according to the rule of the Roman law, Quod repudiatur, retro nostrum non fuisse palam est (h).

The abandonment transfers the property saved to the insurers in proportion to their respective subscriptions.

And it relates back to the commencement of the voyage.

(a) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 215.—(b) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 215.—(c) Valin, art. 60, p. 133, art. 47, p. 103. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 194.—(d) Vid. Leffroiden. ch 7. art. 1.—(e) Emerig. tom. 2 p. 194.—(f) Vid. sup. ch. 4, § 4. p. 146.—(g) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 196.—(h) §. lib. 38, tit. 5. Si quid in fraudem.

In France the abandonment of the ship transfers the freight she has earned.

This principle is carried so far by the French law, that, by the abandonment of a ship, the insurer becomes intitled to all the freight she may have earned, freight being deemed an incident inseparable from the ship. Emerigon even goes the length of saying, that it is inconsistent with the nature of the contract of insurance, that the owner should claim the freight of a ship, the value of which he has received from the insurer upon the abandonment. And he supports this opinion on the ground that in the course of the voyage the value of the ship must necessarily diminish in nearly the same proportion as the freight increases; and consequently, that the value of the ship and freight, at any given time in the voyage, is only equal to the original value of the ship, at the commencement of the voyage (a). But this notion could only have originated in the absurd supposition that a ship can earn no more freight, in any voyage, than is sufficient to re-instate her in the same condition she was in when she sailed on that voyage.

By the abandonment of the ship the insurer becomes the legal owner, is liable for all her outgoings, and entitled to all her future earnings.

By the abandonment of a ship, according to our law, as I understand it, the insurer becomes the legal assignee and owner, and from that time, he is liable for all her future outgoings, and consequently entitled to all her future earnings. While any profit can be derived to the insured from the future use of the ship, it cannot be deemed a total loss; and he can only exercise the right of abandoning, upon the presumption in law that the existing circumstances are equivalent to a total loss. Under such circumstances, the owner compels the insurer to purchase the hope of salvage, for the full value insured, and thereby puts him into his place for all chances favourable or otherwise. The chance of the ship's earning freight is one ground of the calculation made by the insured, when he decides whether or not he will abandon. The insured could not receive more, if the ship had been actually lost or destroyed, than he receives upon an abandonment; and, in such a case, he cannot be in a better situation than if such a loss had really happened: Nor is it reasonable that the insurer, who, besides paying the full value of the ship, incurs the expence and risk of all future contingencies, should not be entitled to her future earnings.—After an abandonment of a ship, the underwriters are not bound to pursue the voyage contracted for, at their own risk and expence, without any compensation; for a contract of this nature is not like a mortgage which binds the land; but is personal, and only binds the owner who made it. And even supposing the previous contracts of the owners with the freighter would, in equity, after an abandonment, bind the underwriters to pursue the voyage, if practicable, the same equity would transfer to the latter the benefit, as well as the burthen, of those contracts. Some voyages, such as those to the East Indies, may last two or three years. The ship may be stranded at the commencement of her outward voyage, and be in such peril as to warrant an abandonment. If then, the owner, electing to abandon, receive payment from the underwriters on the ship, as for a total loss, it cannot be contended that he would be entitled to the use of the ship for the remainder of the voyage.

(a) Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 221, vid. sup. ch. 2, § 6. value

The underwriters upon the ship are not bound to take notice of any contract for freight, or the insurance of it, to which they are no parties. They are not obliged to accept a qualified abandonment; and an unqualified abandonment must transfer to them the entire property, with all its incidents. There cannot, therefore, be an abandonment of the ship and freight to different sets of underwriters. It is with good reason, therefore, that the laws of France and other countries consider freight as so inseparable in its nature, from the property of the ship, that they do not permit them to be separately insured (a); and the difficulties which arose in the following cases sufficiently shew the inconsistency, not to say the absurdity, of the contrary practice, as permitted in this country.

If both ship and freight be insured in the same policy, it can never be a question to whom freight, earned after

The underwriters are not bound by the contracts of the insured respecting freight, or the insurance of it.

If the ship and freight be separately insured, and each be abandoned; to whom freight subsequently earned shall belong.

(a) Vid. sup. ch. 3. § 6.

an abandonment, and payment of a total loss, shall belong; But where the ship and freight are separately insured, and each is abandoned to the respective underwriters, it then becomes a question to which set of underwriters freight earned afterwards shall belong.—In the following case that question was much considered; but the court determined it upon the express contract of the insured, upon the abandonment, to assign all freight that might be recovered to the underwriters on freight. But it is not to be inferred from this, that it was the opinion of the court that the underwriters on the ship were not entitled to the freight: On the contrary, the court seems to have thought that the insured was bound to account to them also for the freight earned by the ship, deducting the expences of provisions, wages, &c.

Thompson v. Rawcroft, 4 East, 34.

A ship and freight are separately insured, and the ship being laid under embargo in a foreign port, the owner abandons the ship and the freight to the respective underwriters, who pay a total loss on each; the owner undertaking, in case the ship should be restored, to assign the ship to the one set of underwriters, and the freight to the other. The ship is restored, and earns freight, which is paid to the owner.—Whatever may be the right of the underwriters on the ship to the freight thus earned, the insured is bound by his express contract to pay the freight so received to the underwriters on

In that case the defendant, having chartered the ship Thefeus to one Saunders for a voyage to Riga, to fetch a cargo of timber to Portsmouth, caused a policy to be effected on the ship from Portsmouth to Riga and back, for 2,400l and another upon the freight from Riga to Portsmouth for 1,400l.—After the ship arrived at Riga, an embargo was laid by the Russian government on all British ships in that port; the captain and crew were marched up the country, and detained as prisoners from November 1800 till May 1801. Upon intelligence of these events arriving in England, the defendant abandoned, and received from the respective sets of underwriters the amount of their respective subscriptions as for a total loss, and subscribed an indorsement on the policy on the ship, dated 19th January 1801, undertaking 'to account to the underwriters for the ship, if restored to or recovered by them; or to make an assignment to them in proportion to the sums insured.' He also subscribed an indorsement on the policy on freight, dated the 11th of February 1801, stating, 'that the interest in the freight insured, being abandoned to the underwriters to the extent of their subscriptions, it was agreed to assign all right of recovery, compensation, &c. &c. to certain persons named, for the benefit of the underwriters and the insured, according to their respective interests.'—The embargo being afterwards taken off, the ship was restored, stored, and brought a cargo to Portsmouth, and the defendant received 1,857l. for freight.—The plaintiff, who was an underwriter on the policy on freight for 150l. called on the defendant to make an assignment of the freight, according to the indorsement on the policy on freight, or to pay him the 150l. and interest.—The underwriters on the ship insisted that they were entitled to the freight, and gave the defendant notice of this claim.—The argument of this case at first proceeded on the idea that the defendant was a mere stakeholder, and that the question arose between the underwriters on the ship and those on the freight, viz. which of them were entitled to the freight earned after the abandonment. But the question was narrowed by the court to the consideration of the specific agreement between the plaintiff and defendant; and upon this ground alone the case was decided in favour of the plaintiff.—Lord Ellenborough seemed to be of opinion that if the question had been, which of the two sets of the underwriters were entitled to the freight earned by the ship after the abandonment, those on the ship ought to have prevailed.—But the court were clearly of opinion that, in this case, the owner was bound by the terms of his contract, to pay the underwriters on the freight their proportion of the freight which he had received.—It was then suggested on behalf of the defendant that at least he was entitled to deduct the expences of the voyage, such as wages, provisions, &c. which were in the nature of salvage on the freight.—But Lord Ellenborough said,—“The defendant has received the entire freight, and therefore he must pay it over. The underwriters on the ship, from the time of the abandonment to them, stand in the same situation as the owner; and as the owner was liable to all these expences before, so, after the abandonment, they must be borne by the underwriters on the ship. Expences of this sort are not, properly speaking, salvage on the freight, but they are charges paid by the owner of the ship for the benefit of those to whom he abandoned it; and therefore he will be entitled to retain a proportionable part on his settlement with them.”

freight. And he has no right to deduct the wages or other charges out of it.

Latham & Terry, 3 Bos. & P. 479.

Same point decided.

In a subsequent case, circumstanced nearly the same as the above, the insured abandoned first to the underwriters on the ship, afterwards to those on freight, and undertook, upon payment of the loss, to assign to the underwriters on the ship, 'all their right and interest in the ship, in such manner as the committee for adjusting the loss might direct;' and to the underwriters on freight, 'all their right and title to all future benefit that might accrue thereafter, except as insurers therein.'

—The court, conceiving that in this, as in the last case, the insured having bound themselves to account to the underwriters on freight, for all the freight they might receive, determined that they had made themselves responsible to the underwriters on freight for the freight they had received; they intimated, however, that the underwriters were to contribute proportionably to the expence of bringing the cargo home.—But, in giving judgment, they expressly declared that they did not mean to decide the question, as between the two sets of underwriters.

McCarty and others v. Abel, 5 East, 383.

Upon an hostile embargo, the insured abandons the ship and freight to the respective underwriters on each. The ship perishes, the voyage and earns freight, which is paid to the underwriters on the ship. But, the ship having earned freight, the insured cannot recover against the underwriters on freight.

A third case, under circumstances nearly similar, has since been determined. It was an action brought by the owners of the ship Thomas against the underwriters in a policy on freight from Riga to Plymouth. There, the plaintiffs, upon receiving intelligence of the embargo, abandoned their interest in the freight to the underwriters thereon; and, at the same time, abandoned the ship to the underwriters on the ship, and assigned the ship to trustees for the use of the underwriters thereon, they agreeing to pay a total loss. The master of the ship afterwards drew a bill on the agent of the underwriters on the ship for 718l. 3s. 6d. to pay for repairs at Riga; and, on his arrival at Plymouth, received from the agent of the freighters 500l. part of the freight, to pay seamen's wages and the charges of landing the cargo. The freight earned by the ship amounted to 2,242l. 6s. 10d. the balance of which, after deducting the 500l. was paid to the agent of the underwriters on the ship, under an indemnity against any claims which might be made, either by the owners of the ship, or the underwriters on freight.—On behalf of the plaintiffs it was argued, that the law of England,

England, in recognizing ship and freight as distinct subjects of insurance, necessarily recognizes them as distinct subjects of abandonment; and therefore, as a simple insurance of a ship does not cover freight, so an abandonment of the former must be always understood with an implied reservation of the latter. That the freight which has been earned and paid cannot, as between these parties, destroy the right of action which accrued to the insured upon the abandonment; but that, at most, it was only so much salvage for the benefit of the underwriters on freight, which they were entitled to recover from the freighters.—But the court determined in favour of the defendant.—Lord Ellenborough, in delivering the judgment of the court, did not express any opinion upon the question, whether a title to the freight passed by the assignment of the ship, but merely said that the ship having earned freight, no loss could properly be demandable against the underwriters on freight; and that, if the freight could, in any other sense, be considered as lost to the insured, it became so, not by any of the perils insured against, but by an abandonment of the ship, which was the act of the insured themselves, with which the underwriters on freight had no concern.

In a still more recent case, where the facts were nearly similar, the insured abandoned, first, the ship, and afterwards the freight, to the respective underwriters on each, who accordingly paid a total loss on each. The ship, which was a seeking, and not a chartered, ship, earned 1,900*l.* freight on her homeward voyage, which was paid to the insured. In an action brought by one of the underwriters on freight, for his proportion of this sum, as money received by the insured to his use, it seems to have been assumed, that the underwriters on freight were entitled to the benefit of salvage, and therefore entitled to the freight received by the insured, deducting the expences to which freight is liable; and the principal question was, what those expences ought to be.—The court determined that the following expences incurred in prosecuting the adventure might be deducted from the salvage on the ship and freight, in proportion to their respective values. 1. The expence of the ship and crew in the foreign port, including port charges, beside the expence of shipping the cargo, which exclusively falls on the underwriters on freight; 2. Insurance thereon; 3. Wages of the crew during their detention; 4. The wages and provisions of the crew, from their liberation in the foreign port till their discharge at home: But, that the insured was not entitled to deduct, 1. The charges paid at the port of discharge on the ship and cargo; 2. Insurance on the ship; 3. Diminution of the value of the ship and tackle, by wear and tear, on the voyage home.—Lord Ellenborough, in the course of the argument, took an opportunity of observing that, after an abandonment of the ship to the underwriters on the ship, he had great difficulty in saying that the insured could abandon the freight, which seemed to follow the property in the ship, being the earnings made by the subsequent use of that which was then become the property of others, to another set of underwriters; and, as a general question, he desired to be understood as giving no opinion upon it.

Sharp v. Gladstone, 7 East, 24.

In a similar case, the freight received by the owner is payable to the underwriters on freight, subject to a deduction of a proportion of the charges incurred in prosecuting the voyage.

Where the insurance is for less than the value of the thing insured, the abandonment is in the same proportion.

Where the interest of the insured is not entirely covered by the insurance, he may abandon to the extent of the sum insured; for he is his own insurer for the residue.—Thus, if goods of the value of 5,000*l.* be insured only to the amount of 4,000*l.* and a total loss happen, the insured shall only abandon four fifths of what is saved; the remaining fifth will belong to himself (a); and he will be tenant in common, for that fifth, with the insurers.—The same rule holds where the cargo, by a new purchase during the voyage, is augmented in quantity.

If goods be partly insured, and money borrowed on respondentia for the residue; the insurer will have the legal title to what is abandoned, and the lender an equitable claim for his proportion.

So, where goods are only partly insured, and the owner has borrowed money on respondentia to the value of the residue; if he abandon, the insurer and the lender have a joint claim to what is saved, in proportion to their respective interests. But by the abandonment, the insurer is put in the place of the insured, and has the legal title to the effects saved, and the lender only an equitable claim to his proportion (a).

(a) Emerig, tom. 2, p. 215, 227. Valin. fur. art. 47, h. t. p. 106.

Yet, by the law of France (b), the claim of the lender, in such case, shall be preferred to that of the insurer, to the extent of his capital.—The reason of this preference is, that the lender contributes directly to the procuring of the goods; whereas the insurer is only a surety to protect the adventurer from the risk, without furnishing the thing put in risk. The lender has a substantial interest in the goods, and being in nature of a pawnee, has a sort of lien on them, which cannot be discharged by the transfer which the abandonment operates to the insurer. This only puts the insurer in the place of the insured; but the creditor and debtor can never have concurrent rights (c). Emerigon even goes so far as to say that the lender's claim ought to be preferred, even for the marine interest.—Valin (d) holds a contrary opinion, and argues to refute this reasoning contained in a letter which he had received from Emerigon on this subject. Emerigon, however, in his book, supports his former opinion, and triumphs in its being sanctioned by the approbation of Pothier (e).

In France the claim of the lender is preferred to that of the insurer.

If there be three insurances; one on the ship and cargo; one on the ship only; and one on the cargo only; Emerigon (f) thinks that insurers on the ship and cargo have an equal claim on the effects saved, with the insurers on the cargo only, and that they have a like claim on the freight, and the remains of the ship, with the insurers on the ship only, in proportion to their respective subscriptions.—For example: If a ship be valued at 5,000l., the cargo 5,000l., total 10,000l.; and these are insured by different policies, thus;

If there be three policies, one on the ship and cargo, one on the ship only, and one on the cargo only; how, in case of abandonment, the claims of the different sets of insurers shall be adjusted.

(a) Vid. Emerig. t. 2. p. 234.—(b) Ord. mar. tit. contrats à la grosse, art. 18.—(c) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 234, 235.—(d) Valin, tit. contrats à la grosse, art. 18.—(e) Pothier, contrats à la grosse, n. 49.—(f) Tom. 2, p. 240.

	£
On ship and cargo	3,000
On the ship only	3,000
On the cargo only	3,000
Uninsured	1,000
	<hr/>
	10,000

A shipwreck happens, and the net proceeds of the wreck of the ship are 500l., and of the cargo 500l.; total 1,000l. Emerigon would adjust the claims of all parties thus :

	£
To the owners for their part of ship and cargo uninsured,	100
To the insurers on ship and cargo, a moiety of the produce of the wreck,	225
The like to the insurers on the ship,	225
To the insurers on the cargo, a moiety of the produce of the goods saved,	225
The like to the insurers on the ship and cargo,	225
	<hr/>
	1,000

By this adjustment the insurers on the ship and cargo would have a double share of the effects abandoned, which is manifestly unjust.—An English merchant would, I conceive, adjust the different claims thus :

	£
To the owners, for their part of ship and cargo uninsured,	100
To the insurers on ship and cargo, a moiety of three-fifths of the produce of the wreck,	150
To the insurers on the ship, three-fifths of the produce of the wreck,	300
To the insurers on the cargo, three-fifths of the produce of the goods saved,	300
To the insurers on the ship and cargo, a moiety of three-fifths of the produce of the goods saved,	150
	<hr/>
	1,000
	<hr/>
The

The abandonment does not only entitle the underwriters to all that can be saved of the effects insured; but if compensation be made to the insured for the injury from which the loss arose, this compensation shall go to the underwriters; for when they have paid the loss, they, and not the insured, are the real sufferers.—This will appear by the following case:

The King granted letters of reprisal against the Spaniards, for the benefit of his subjects, in consideration of the losses they had sustained by unjust captures. The commissioners appointed to distribute the produce of these reprisals among the sufferers, would not permit the insurers, but the owners only, to make claim to the parts of the prizes allotted to the sufferers, although the owners were already satisfied for their loss by the insurers, who thereupon brought their bill in Chancery.—Lord Hardwicke, C. decreed in favour of the insurers.—He said;—"The person originally sustaining the loss was the owner; but, after satisfaction made to him, the insurer. No doubt but, from that time, as to the goods themselves, if restored in specie, or compensation made for them, the insured stood as a trustee for the insurer, in proportion to what he paid; although the commissioners did right to avoid being entangled in accounts, and in adjusting the proportion between them. Their commission was limited in time; they saw who was owner; nor was it material to them to whom he assigned his interest, as it was in effect after satisfaction made."

If, upon a total loss happening, the ship be abandoned, but she afterwards arrive safe; this shall not avoid the abandonment. On the one hand, the insurers shall take to their own use all the profit of the voyage; and the insured is entitled to nothing, except for so much as he was uninsured (a). On the other, they shall not, on account of the safe arrival of the ship, refuse to

If, after the loss is paid, compensation be made to the owner, this shall go to the insurer.

Randal v. Gockran, in Chan. 1748. 1 Ves. 93.

Reprisals being made on the Spaniards to indemnify the sufferers by unjust captures; the insurers, who have paid the owners the losses sustained by those captures, shall stand in their place, and receive their proportion.

If the ship, after abandonment, arrive safe, the insurer shall have all the profit of the voyage.

(a) Le Guidon, ch. 7, art. 12.

pay the sum insured.—As if, upon a capture, the insured abandon, and the ship be afterwards released, or otherwise recover her liberty; the insurers shall nevertheless satisfy the insured as for a total loss: But then they are entitled to all the benefit of the voyage (a).

But they cannot compel the insured to take back the thing insured, and refund the money.

So, if the ship or goods insured happen to be recovered undamaged, after the insurer has paid a total loss; the following case will shew that he cannot compel the insured to refund the money, and take back the ship or goods; but the insurer shall stand in his place, and shall have the benefit of salvage.

Da Costa v. Frith, 4 Bur. 1966, sup. 132.

A total loss is paid on a quantity of bullion, which is afterwards recovered: The insurer cannot recover back more than his proportion of the value of it, after deducting the expence of salvage.

An insurance was made, 'Upon any of the packet-boats that should sail from Lisbon to Falmouth, for one year, upon any kind of goods; such goods to be valued at the sum insured on the packet-boat, without further proof of interest than the policy; and to make no return of premium for want of interest, being on bullion or goods.'—The defendant, who was one of the insured, had an interest in bullion on board the Hanover packet, on a voyage from Lisbon to Falmouth. The ship was totally lost off Falmouth; and the loss was adjusted at 100l. per cent.; but by a memorandum on the policy, the insured agreed that,—'Should any salvage thereafter be recovered, he would refund to the insurers, whatever he might so recover, in such proportion as the sum insured bore to the whole interest'; and the insurer accordingly paid the whole sum insured.—An iron trunk, which contained all the bullion, was afterwards fished up, and the bullion recovered, without any loss or prejudice whatever, and delivered to the insurer. The expence of salvage amounted to 63l. 8s. 2d.—The insurer, upon this, brought an action against the insured for money had and received, to recover back the amount of his subscription. The defendant (the insured) paid into court 48l. 4s., being the plaintiff's proportion of the value of the bullion recovered, after deducting the expence of salvage.—On the part of the plaintiff (the insurer) insurer) it was contended that by the recovery of the bullion, the contract was performed on the part of the insurers; that the loss could only be considered as a partial loss, viz. the amount of the salvage; and that the agreement to allow the insurer in the proportion of the sum insured to the whole interest, made no difference.

(a) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 197.

—But the court were unanimously of opinion that the insurer was not entitled to recover back the money he had paid to the insured, but only his proportion of the value of the goods saved, after deducting the expence of salvage, which was the sum paid into court.

An abandonment once properly made, upon a sufficient ground, and accepted by the insurers, is absolute and binding upon both parties; nor can it be revoked but by mutual consent (a). Emerigon says, that if a ship, by reason of sea damage, be condemned as incapable of proceeding on her voyage, and the insured abandon; but the ship, being refitted, is brought home at the expence of the insurers; the insurers cannot compel the insured to take her back, but must pay the total loss (b) —Valin holds a contrary opinion, and says that if the insurers have not voluntarily paid the sum insured, they may, in such case, oblige the insured to take back the ship; the only question between them being, as to the amount of the partial loss (c). The opinion of Emerigon seems to be founded on the better reasoning.

An abandonment once properly made is irrevocable.

But the abandonment is irrevocable only where it is made upon a sufficient ground: And, therefore, if it appear to have been made upon a partial, and not a total loss; or upon information that proves false or unfounded, it will be void ipso jure. Nam recte revocari, rescindi, et retrahi dicitur, quod ipso jure nullum est (d).

But if it be not upon a sufficient ground, it will be void.

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 138. Emerig. tom. 2. p. 197.—
(b) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 195.—(c) Valin, on art 60. h. t.
p. 144.—(d) Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 197.

Sect. V.

Of the ordering and disposal of the Effects abandoned.

In case of misfortune, the insured is bound to use his endeavours to save as much as possible.

IN case of shipwreck or other misfortune, the effects that are saved continue, till abandonment, the property of the insured, who is bound in justice, honour, and conscience, to use his utmost endeavours to make the most of what may be rescued from destruction, in order, as much as possible, to lighten the burthen of the insurers. To enable him to do this, without prejudice to his right of abandonment, our policies provide that,—‘in case of any loss or misfortune, the insured, their factors, servants, and assigns, shall be at liberty to sue, and labour about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the goods and merchandizes and ship, &c. without prejudice to the insurance; to the charges whereof, the insurers agree to contribute, each according to the rate and quantity of his subscription.’ The meaning of this clause is, that, till the insured has been informed of what has happened, no act of the captain shall prejudice their right to abandon (a). There is a similar provision in the policies of all other commercial countries, with a similar undertaking on the part of the underwriters, to defray all expences, without limit, except in the policy used at Marseilles, in which the insurers only undertake to defray all expences occasioned by the salvage, provided they do not exceed the value of the effects saved; a precaution as Emerigon observes, which prevents their being ever liable for more than the sum insured (b). This accords with the sentiments of Cleirac, who says that the expences of the recovery of the effects saved, ought not to increase the loss beyond the sum insured (a). But this restriction has occasioned many inconveniences both to the insured and insurers (b), which is the reason, perhaps, why it has not been adopted in any other place that I know of.

(a) Per Asburst, J. in Mitchell v. Edie, sup. 590. — (b) Vid, Emerig. tom. 2, p. 205.

As to the captain, the ship and cargo being confided to his care, it is peculiarly his duty, in order that he may shew himself worthy of so great a trust, to employ all his courage, skill, and industry, in the protection and preservation of the one and the other.

Duty of the captain in the care of what may be saved.

From the nature of his situation, he has an implied authority, not only from the insured, but also from the insurers and all others interested in the ship or cargo, in case of misfortune, to do whatever he thinks most conducive to the general interest of all concerned; and they are all bound by his acts (c). Therefore, if the ship be disabled by stress of weather, or any other peril of the sea, the captain may hire another vessel for the transport of the goods to their port of destination, if he think it for the interest of all concerned that he should do so. Or he may, upon a capture, appeal against a sentence of condemnation, or carry on any other proceedings for the recovery of the ship and cargo, provided he has a probable ground for doing so. Or, he may, upon the loss of the ship, invest the produce of the goods saved in other goods, which he may ship for his original port of destination; and this, according to the doctrine of Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Buller, in the case of Plantamour v. Staples (d), shall bind the insurers. For whatever is recovered of the effects insured, the captain is accountable to the insurers. If the insured neglect to abandon when he has it in his power to do so, he adopts the acts of the captain, and he is bound by them. If, on the other hand, the insurers, after notice of abandonment, suffer the captain to continue in the management, he becomes their agent, and they are bound by his acts (e).

His power.

When agent of either party.

(a) Cleirac sur Le Guidon, ch. 20, art. 9.—(b) Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 205.—(c) Per Lord Mansfield in Mills v. Fletcher, sup. 578.—(d) Vid. c. 5, § 2, sup. 170.—(e) Per Ashurst, J. in Mitchell v. Edie sup. 590..

Duty of the sailors.

As to the sailors,—when a misfortune happens, they are bound to save and preserve the merchandize to the best of their power; and while they are so employed, they are entitled to wages, so far, at least, as what is saved will allow: But if they refuse to assist in this, they shall have neither wages nor reward. In this the Rhodian law (a), and the laws of Oleron (b), of Wifrey (c), and of the Hans Towns (d), all agree.

(a) ff. de leg. Rhod. art. 3. — (b) Art. 3. — (c) Art. 15.
— (d) Art 44.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Adjustment of Losses.

THE adjustment of a loss is the settling and ascertaining the amount of the indemnity which the insured, after all proper allowances and deductions have been made, is entitled to receive, and the proportion of this, which each underwriter is liable to pay, under the policy. To ascertain, with due precision, the amount of a loss, is sometimes a work of considerable difficulty : And though this is generally performed, without litigation, by persons conversant with this branch of business, questions sometimes arise, upon which the most experienced merchants cannot agree, and then the law must draw the line between them.

By the law of England, as it now stands, as well as by the general law of merchants, the contract of insurance ought not to be lucrative to the insured, nor enable him to make a profit out of the loss of another. It ought to afford him an indemnity, and no more (a). The insurer ought never to pay less, nor the insured receive more, than that which a fair indemnity demands. And this should be ascertained, not upon subtilties and niceties, but upon plain and easy rules, the dictates of common sense, drawn from the truth of the case.

In adjusting a loss, the first thing to be considered is, how the quantity of the damage for which the underwriters are liable, shall be ascertained. This being known, the next, and generally the most difficult, point to be settled, is, by what rule this shall be appreciated. When these things are satisfactorily ascertained, the adjustment is usually indorsed on the policy and signed by the underwriters. We will therefore consider,

(a) Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 2, art. 12. Emerig. tom. 1. p. 259.

- I. How the quantity of damage shall be ascertained;
- II. How the loss shall be appreciated;
- III. What shall be the effect of an adjustment.

SECT. I.

How the Quantity of Damage shall be ascertained.

WHEN a loss has happened, and it appears, under all the circumstances, to be a total loss, and the insured decides to abandon, he must give notice of this to the underwriters in a reasonable time, otherwise, as we have already seen (a), he will waive his right to abandon, and must be content to claim only as for a partial loss.

When the policy is a valued one, and the loss total.

When the loss is admitted to be total, and the policy is a valued one, the insured is entitled to receive the whole sum insured, subject to such deductions as may have been agreed by the policy to be made in case of loss. For the insured, by allowing the value to be inserted in the policy, agrees that it shall be taken as there stated; and it is the same as if he had admitted it at the trial of the cause (b).

Difference between the adjustment of an open and a valued policy—

It is only in the case of a total loss that there is any difference between an open and a valued policy. Upon the latter, the value is admitted, and the insured has only to prove, if the insurance was on goods, that the goods valued were on board. Upon an open policy, it is not only necessary to shew that the goods were on board, but also to prove the value of them; which value, not exceeding the sum insured, is the sum the insurers are bound to pay.

But in the case of a partial loss, the like inquiry is to be made into the amount of the loss, whether the policy be of the one sort or of the other (a). The indemnity secured by either sort of policy is, that, if the thing insured do not come safe to the port of destination, but is lessened in value by damage received in the voyage from any of the perils insured against, the loss shall be borne by the insurer.

(a) Sup. ch. 13, § 2.—(b) Vid. sup. 287, 8.

When the loss consists in the total loss of one entire individual, parcel of the goods insured, and this is capable of a several and distinct valuation; as if, out of 100 hogshheads of sugar, ten happen to be lost, and the rest arrive safe; the insurer must pay the value of the ten (b).

Rule where the loss consists of one entire individual.

When a part of the goods insured is saved, and this exceeds the amount of the freight, the practice is to deduct the freight from the salvage, or goods saved, and to make up the loss upon the difference. But where the freight exceeds the salvage, then it is a total loss (c).

When part of the goods is saved.

But where the goods insured are damaged in the whole or in part, it becomes necessary to ascertain the quantity of such damage, which is done by taking the value of the goods, in their damaged state, from the prime cost, and the remainder will be the amount of the loss.

Where all the goods are damaged.

If several articles be insured for one entire sum, but with a distinct valuation to each, and only one be put in risk: If that one be lost, the insured shall recover such a proportion of the sum insured, as the value of that article bore to the value of the whole.

Where several articles are insured, and only one put in risk.

As, where the plaintiff wrote from St. Kitts to his agent in London, desiring him to make insurance on a ship and cargo to the amount of 5,500 l. valuing the ship at 1500 l. Only 600 l. could be effected. No part of the cargo was ever put on board, so that in fact the policy attached only on the ship.—The ship being lost, and an action brought on the policy, the above rule was contended for on the part of the defendant.—Lord Kenyon, who tried Amery v. Rogers,

1 Esp. Rep. 207

(a) 2 Bur. 1171. Vid. sup. 288.—(b) 2 Bur. 1170.—
—(c) Vid. Boyfield v. Brown, sup. 587, the cause, seemed to be of opinion that, as the whole sum insured was less than the value of the ship, the plaintiff was entitled to the whole.—But the jury having intimated that the rule, as laid down by the defendant's counsel, was that which prevailed in such cases at Lloyd's coffee house, his lordship assented to their giving a verdict for such a proportion of the sum insured as the value of the ship bore to the value of both ship and cargo.

When there is a clause to be free of average under so much per cent. how that proportion shall be ascertained.

If there be a clause in the policy, to be free of average from a particular risk under so much per cent. and a loss occasioned by that risk take place; the proportion which the loss bears to the cargo, must be calculated upon the cargo which was on board when the loss happened, not upon that which was on board at any other time.

Rick v. Parr,
1 E/p. Rep. 444,
Sup. 492.

Thus:—In a policy on a slave ship, there was a memorandum, to be free of average under 5 per cent. for loss by insurrection of the slaves.—An insurrection took place when there were only 49 slaves on board. Seven of these were killed.—As this loss must amount to 5 per cent. to make the underwriters liable, it became a question, at what time the proportion which the loss bore to the cargo should be taken;—whether at the time when the insurrection took place, and the loss happened, or when the whole cargo was on board. Upon examination of persons acquainted with the practice in such cases, it was found that the time when the calculation was to be made, was, when the loss happened, at which time, the proportion of the loss to the cargo then on board, was to regulate the loss to be borne by the underwriters.

Sect. II.

How the Loss shall be appreciated.

What shall be deemed the true price of a thing.

THE true price of a thing is that for which things of the like nature and quality are usually sold in the place where they are situated, if real property; or in the place where they are exposed to sale, if personal (a).

(a) Pothier, Des Ventes, n. 242.

The first price of a thing does not always afford a sure criterion to ascertain its true value. It may have been bought very dear, or very cheap. The circumstances of time and place cause a continual variation in the price of things. For this reason, in cases of general average, the things saved contribute, not according to the prime cost, but according to the price for which they may be sold at the time of settling the average. Non quanti emptæ sunt, sed quanti veniri possunt, is the rule of the Rhodian law (a). The same is adopted in the laws of Wîsby (b).

The first price is not always the true value.

Averages are settled according to the price at the time of settling.

Upon the subject of the valuation of the goods insured there has always been a great diversity of opinion, not only among speculative writers, but also among merchants themselves. Some contending for the prime cost, others for the current price at the time of the loss; some insisting on the price at the time and place where the goods are shipped, others on the price at the port of discharge (c).

Different modes of appreciating a loss.

In France, where almost all policies are valued, the insured has his election to fix the previous valuation, either at the prime cost, or at the current price at the time and place of loading. If the goods be of the growth or manufacture of the insured, the latter valuation is always adopted (d). The same rule that applies to goods, applies also to the ship, which is always valued at the sum she is worth at the time of her departure (e), or at least at the commencement of the risk.—If goods, by being brought from a distance, are augmented in value, they may be estimated at their improved value, and an invoice made accordingly; nor shall the insured be obliged to produce his original accounts, having a right to insure the profit already acquired; and the insurer must either abide by the invoice made by the insured, or require a valuation by skilful persons according to the current prices of the time and place.—It is usual in France to stipulate in the policy that the ship shall remain of the same value during the voyage; which is the reason why Valin (a) says, that where the ship is abandoned, the freight, which augments in the same degree as the ship is deteriorated in value, is also abandoned, as being an inseparable incident to the ship (b).

How the valuation is made in France.

Goods, brought from a distance may be valued at their improved price.

(a) ff de leg. Rhod. l. 2, § 4. — (b) Laws of Wîsby. art. 20. and 39. Vid. Santerna, h. t. par. 3. n. 40. Roccus, n. 31. — (c) Vid. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 261. — (d) Vid. Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 64, and Valin on this art. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 262. — (e) Vid. Emerig. tom. 1 p. 263.

In England the proper value consists of the prime cost and all charges.

The value is never affected by the rise or fall of the market, or the course of exchange.

In England, if the policy be an open one, it is an invariable rule to estimate a total loss, not by any supposed price which the goods might have been deemed worth, at the time of the loss, or for which they might have been sold, had they reached the market for which they were destined; but according to the prime cost, that is, the invoice price, and all duties and expenses incurred till they are put on board, together with the premium of insurance. This is the only true, at least the only legal, mode of estimating a loss, whether total or partial, on goods; and, therefore, whether the goods would have arrived at a good or a bad market is always immaterial (c). Neither is the difference of exchange to be at all regarded in the adjustment; for the underwriter does not insure against any loss arising from such causes (d).

It might, with some degree of plausibility, be insisted that the prime cost, after a long voyage, and when the goods insured had almost reached a market where they would have sold for a great profit, does not amount to an indemnity; for, beside the loss of the profit the merchant might reasonably have expected, he also loses all the benefit he could have derived, from the use of his money in any other adventure. Upon this principle the Consolato del mare (e), in laying down rules for average contributions, declares that if the goods be lost before half the voyage is performed, they are to be valued only at prime cost; but, if after, then at the price at which they might have been sold at the port of delivery.—However reasonable this rule may be, abstractedly considered, and as applied to average contributions, it would be more than counter-balanced by the litigation it would occasion, to decide, in questions of insurance, whether the voyage was half performed; or, if that were indisputable, then, what was the market price at the port of delivery. But, be this as it may, it is the invariable rule in this country, upon an open policy to estimate a total loss upon goods, by adding to the prime cost, all duties and expences and the premium of insurance; for this has constantly been deemed a full indemnity to the insured.

(a) On art. 8. and 64, h. t. p. 56, 136. — (b) Vid. sup. ch. 13, § 4. — (c) Per Buller, J. at N. P. in Dick v. Allen, after Mich. 1785, Park 104. — (d) Per Lord Kenyon in Theluffen v. Bewick, at N. P. 1 Esp. Rep. 77. — (e) Ch. 95.

A ship is valued at the sum she is worth, at the time she sails on the voyage insured, including the expences of repairs, the value of her furniture, provisions and stores, the money advanced to the sailors, and, in general, every expence of the out-fit; to which is added the premium of insurance (a).

How a ship shall be valued.

A partial loss upon either ship or goods, is that proportion of the prime cost, which is equal to the diminution in value occasioned by the damage.—In the case of a partial loss upon goods damaged in the course of the voyage, much doubt has arisen as to the rule or measure by which the damage ought to be appreciated. Where the goods have come to a good market, it has been contended that the insured is intitled to the difference between the price for which the damaged and undamaged goods have been sold at the port of delivery; and that, where the goods have come to a fallen market, the insured ought to receive the difference between the price of the damaged goods, at the port of delivery, and the prime cost or value in the policy. But this would necessarily involve the underwriter in the rise or

When goods are damaged in the course of the voyage, the amount of the loss is that proportion of the prime cost which the price of the damaged bears to the price of the sound in the port of delivery.

(a) By Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 20, the premium cannot be added to the other charges, yet the allowance of it is supported by the authority of Le Guidon, ch. 2, art. 9, ch. 15, art. 3, 13, 15, and the practice of all commercial nations.

fall of the market. Besides, the difference between the price of the found and damaged goods, in a risen market, might amount to more than the invoice price. For instance; suppose the prime cost of a quantity of goods to be 200*l.*, which, coming found to the port of delivery, would sell for 300*l.*, but, being damaged, would sell for only 50*l.*; the difference would be 250; which is more than the prime cost. The true rule is, that the insured is only intitled to that proportion of the prime cost which the price of the damaged bears to the price of the found at the port of delivery; thus, using the relative prices of the damaged and found commodity, at the port of delivery, as a criterion to ascertain the proportion of the prime cost which the underwriter is bound to pay.—As, if goods, valued at 100*l.*, and coming to a good market, would, if found, have been sold for 120*l.*; but are so damaged as not to fetch more than 40*l.*: Then, according to the above rule contended for by the insured, the loss would be 80*l. per cent*: But, according to the rule now established, the loss would be that proportion of the prime cost (100*l.*) which the difference between the price of the damaged and the price of the found goods (80*l.*) bears to the price of the found (120*l.*): Thus:—If 120: 80:: 100*l.*:—the answer is 66*l. 13s. 4d.*, the true loss.—But, if the damaged goods had come to a fallen market, and had fetched only 30*l.* and these, if found, would have been worth 90*l.*; the insured, according to the above exploded rule, could claim only 60*l. per cent.*; but, according to the true rule, he would be entitled to that proportion of 100*l.* which 60*l.* bears to 90*l.*, namely 66*l. 13s. 4d.*—This will be found fully exemplified in the following case.

Lewis v. Rucker,
2 Bur. 1167.

Sugars valued at 30*l. per* hoghead are so damaged in the voyage, that they are sold at the port of delivery, for 20*l. 0s. 8d. per* hoghead, but, if found, would

An insurance was made upon goods, ‘At and from the island of St. Thomas to Hamburg, from the loading at that island, till the ship should arrive and land the goods at Hamburg.’—The goods which consisted of sugars, coffee, and indigo were valued; the clayed sugars at 30*l. per* hoghead, Muscovado at 20*l.*; and the coffee and indigo were also valued. Sugars were, as usual, warranted free from average under 5*l. per cent.* and all other other goods under 3 l. per cent. unless general, or the ship should be stranded.—In the voyage the sea water got in; and when the ship arrived at Hamburg, it appeared that every hoghead of sugar was damaged; so that it became necessary to sell them immediately at Hamburg: And the difference between the price they sold for, and what they would have fetched there, had they been sound, was as 20l. 0s. 8d. per hoghead, is to 23 l. 7s. 8d. That is, they were sold for 3 l. 7s. per hoghead less than they would have been worth, had they been sound.—The defendant paid into court that proportion of the sum at which the sugars were valued in the policy, which the price of the damaged bore to that of the sound sugars at Hamburg (a).—The only question was, by what measure or rule the damage ought to have been estimated.—The plaintiff proved that, at the time of the insurance, sugars were worth 35 l. per hoghead at Hamburg; but that the expectation of a peace had suddenly sunk them; that the owner of the sugars, before the ship arrived at Hamburg, and before he could know that they were damaged, had sent orders that they should be housed there till the price should rise above 30 l. per hoghead; that, in fact, the negotiation not taking place, sugars did not rise 25 l. per cent; that he might have sold these sugars at 30 l. per hoghead, if they could have been kept, and the da-have fetched 23 l. 7s. 8d.; so that the difference was 3 l. 7s. per hoghead. The loss in this case, is that proportion of 30 l. (the value in the policy) which 3 l. 7s. (the difference between damaged and sound at the port of delivery) bears to 23 l. 7s. 8d. the price of the sound at the port of delivery.—The amount of the loss does not depend on the prices in the market at the port of delivery: But the proportion of the prima cost which the loss amounts to, may be ascertained by the prices which the damaged and sound bear to each other in the port of delivery.

(a) The reporter of this case makes Lord Mansfield state that the sum paid into court bore the like proportion to the sum at which the sugars were valued in the policy, (30l.) as the price of the damaged sugars (20l. 0s. 8d.) bore to the price of the sound at Hamburg (23 l. 7s. 8d.). This, by a common operation of arithmetic, would be 25 l. 14s. per hoghead, which shews that the rule by which the money was paid into court, is not correctly stated in the report. The sum paid into court must have borne the same proportion to 30 l. as 3 l. 7s. (the difference between the sound and damaged sugars at Hamburg) bore to 23 l. 7s. 8d. (the price of the sound there). This comes to 4l. 5s. 11½d. per hoghead the real amount of the loss, according to the principles laid down by Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court.

mage they had received was the only reason why they were not kept. The plaintiff, therefore, insisted that the necessity of an immediate sale, and the loss sustained by it, ought to have been taken into the account in computing the damage.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, left it to the jury to decide, whether the difference between the sound and the damaged sugars, at the port of delivery, ought to be the rule: Or, whether the loss occasioned by an immediate sale, should be taken into consideration. The jury, amongst whom were many considerable merchants, who perfectly understood the subject, and formed their judgment from their own experience, found the defendant's rule of estimation to be right, and gave their verdict for him accordingly.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court were unanimously of opinion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have the price for which the damaged sugars were sold, made up to 30*l.* per hoghead; and that the rule by which the jury had gone was the right measure.—Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court, said,—“The rule by which the defendant and the jury have gone is this:—The defendant takes the proportion of the difference between sound and damaged sugars in the port of delivery, and pays that proportion upon the value of the goods specified in the policy; and has no regard to the price, in money, which either sound or damaged sugars bore at the port of delivery. He says the proportion of the difference is equally the rule, whether the goods came to a rising or a falling market. For instance; suppose the prime cost or value in the policy to be 30*l.* and the damaged goods sell for 40*l.*; but, if sound, would have sold for 50*l.*; the difference is a fifth: The insurer must therefore pay a fifth of 30*l.*:—E converso, if they come to a losing market, and, being damaged, sell for 10*l.*; but if sound would have sold for 20*l.*; the difference is one half: The insurer must therefore pay 15*l.* that is half the prime cost or value in the policy. Two objections have been made to this rule: First, that it is going by a different measure in the case of a partial, from that which governs in the case of a total, loss; for, upon a total loss, the prime cost, or value in the policy, must be paid.—The answer to which objection is, that the distinction is founded in the nature of the thing. Insurance is a contract of indemnity against the perils of the voyage, to the amount of the value in the policy; and therefore if the thing be totally lost, the insurer must pay the whole value which he insured at the out-set. But, where a part of the commodity is spoiled, no measure can be taken from the prime cost to ascertain the quantity of the damage sustained. The only way is to ascertain whether the thing be a third or a fourth worse than the sound commodity; and then pay a third or fourth of the prime cost or value of the goods so damaged (a). The second objection is, that this being a valued policy, was in nature of a wager; and if so, there could be no partial loss, and the insured could only abandon and recover as for a total loss; because the value specified was fictitious."

This rule equally holds whether the goods come to a rising or a falling market.

—In answer to this objection, his Lordship said,—"To argue that there can be no adjustment of a partial loss upon a valued policy, is directly contrary to the very terms of the policy itself. It is expressly provided that the article of sugar shall be subject to average, if the loss exceed 5 per cent.; and even if it were not subject to average the consequence would be that every partial loss must thereby become total: But then, the insured could only recover in the event of a total loss; and consequently the plaintiffs in this case would not be entitled to recover at all; for there is no colour to say that this was a total loss; besides the plaintiffs have taken the goods and sold them. In opposition to the measure which the jury have gone by, the plaintiffs con-

(a) Lord Mansfield, in this answer to the first objection, seems, according to the report, to have been labouring to account for the supposed difference between the measure in the case of a partial and a total loss. But with great deference, it would seem that the rule to which the objection is made, and which fixes the proportion of the prime cost which must be paid in case of a partial loss, is not inconsistent with, but is founded upon, the practice of paying the whole of the prime cost upon a total loss.

An insurer is never to be involved in the rise or fall of the market.

tend that they ought to be paid the whole value in the policy, upon one of two grounds. 1st. That the general rule of estimating should have been the difference between the price the damaged goods sold for, and the prime cost, or value in the policy. Here the damaged goods sold for 20 l. 0 s. 8 d. per hoghead; and the underwriters should make it up 30 l.—To this I answer, that it would involve the underwriter in the rise or fall of the market; and, in some cases, subject him to pay vastly more than the loss; in others it would deprive the insured of any satisfaction, though there were a loss.—For instance; suppose the prime cost, or value in the policy, 30 l. per hoghead; the sugars damaged; the price of the sound 20 l.; the price of the damaged 19 l. 10 s.: The loss is about a fortieth, and the insurer would be obliged to pay above a third. Suppose they come to a rising market; the sound sugars sell for 40 l.; the damaged for 35 l.: The loss is an eighth; yet the insurer would have to pay nothing.—The 2d ground upon which the plaintiffs contended that the 30 l. should be made up, was that it appeared that the sugars would have sold for that price, if the damage had not made an immediate sale necessary. The moment the jury brought in their verdict, I was satisfied they had done right in disregarding the particular circumstances of this case; and I was convinced of this, after conversing with persons of experience in adjustments, and after the subject had been fully argued at the bar. The nature of the contract is, that the goods shall come safe to the port of delivery; or if not, that the insurer will indemnify the insured to the amount of the prime cost. If they arrive, but lessened in value by damage received at sea, the nature of an indemnity speaks demonstrably, that it must be, by putting the insured in the same situation, (relation being had to the prime cost, or value in the policy), which he would have been in, if the goods had arrived free from damage; that is, by paying such proportion, or aliquot part, of the prime cost, or value in the policy, as corresponds with the proportion, or aliquot part, of the diminution in value occasioned by the damage. The duty accrues upon the ship's arrival and landing her cargo at the port of delivery, and the insured has then a right to demand satisfaction. The adjustment can never depend upon future events or speculations: How long is he to wait; a week, a month, or a year?—In this case, the price rose; but, if peace had been made, the price would have fallen: But the defendant did not insure that there should be no peace. It is true that the owner acted upon political speculation, and ordered the sugars to be kept till the price should be 30 l. or upwards: But no private scheme or project of trade of the insured can affect the insurer: He knew nothing of it: He did not undertake that sugars should bear a price of 30 l. a hoghead. If speculative distinctions of the merchant, and the success of such speculations, were to be regarded, it would introduce the greatest injustice and inconvenience. The insurer knows nothing of them. Here the orders were given after the signing of the policy. But the decisive answer is, that the underwriter has nothing to do with the price, and that the right of the insured to a satisfaction, where goods are damaged, arises immediately upon their being landed at the port of delivery."

The indemnity secured by the policy is such an aliquot part of the prime cost as corresponds with the diminution in value occasioned by the damage.

In the above case it was settled that the relative prices of the found and unfound goods at the port of delivery furnished the true basis for calculating the proportion of the prime cost which the insurer is to pay in case of a partial loss. But it has since been made a question, what are to be taken as the prices of the found and damaged goods, from which the calculation shall be made? Upon that question it has been determined that the respective prices of the damaged and the found commodity are not to be taken from the net proceeds, but from the gross produce of each, at the port of delivery.

Thus, where an action was brought on a policy upon goods insured from Sicily to Hamburg to recover a partial loss occasioned by the sea water having damaged the goods.—At the trial it was referred to one of the jury to ascertain the amount of the loss, who settled it at 76 l. 7 s. 4 d. per cent.—There was a motion for a new trial upon the ground that this calculation had pro-

The duty accrues upon the ship's arrival and landing her cargo; and does not depend on future contingencies.

No speculation of the insured can increase or diminish the amount of the loss.

J. Ineson v. Shadwell, 2 Russ 581.

The prices of the found and damaged goods are not to be taken from the net proceeds, but from the gross produce at the port of delivery.

ceeded on a mistake, the person who made it having taken for his foundation, the difference between the net proceeds of the damaged goods, and what they would have produced if found; instead of the difference between the gross produce of each.—The court determined that the calculation was wrong, and the objection well founded. Mr. Justice Lawrence, who delivered the opinion of the court, said,—“It is agreed on both sides that the loss is to be estimated by the rule laid down in Lewis v. Rucker(a); that the underwriter is not to be subjected to the fluctuation of the market; that the loss for which he is responsible, is that which arises from the deterioration of the commodity by sea damage; and that he is not liable for the duties or charges payable at the place of delivery. Lord Mansfield, in laying down the rule, in that case, speaks of the price of the thing at the port of delivery, as the means of ascertaining the damage; by which he must mean the whole sum which is to be paid for the thing: For the net proceeds are not the price, but only so much of the price as remains after the deduction of certain charges. His lordship cannot mean the price before the mast, leaving the purchaser liable to the payment of further sums; for such payment is in effect but a part of the price, and is not an equivalent for the thing so sold: For if the purchaser were not liable to the duties and charges, we would give as much more as the amount of those charges comes to. The prime cost and those charges constitute the price. One objection to taking the net proceeds, instead of the gross proceeds, as the basis of the calculation, is, that where equal charges are to be paid on the sound and damaged commodity, the underwriter will be affected by the fluctuation of the market. For if two equal quantities be taken from two unequal quantities, the smaller the unequal quantities are, the greater will be the difference between the remainders. But whether the goods come to a rising or a falling market, the deterioration must be the same, and the underwriter should pay the same; which he will do, if the gross produce of the found and unfound be taken as the subject of comparison. Therefore the prices upon a sale before the mast, when equal duties are to be paid, do not correspond with the true proportion between the found and the unfound commodity, or shew in what degree the one is inferior in value to the other."

(a) Sup. 537.

The same question came before the court of Common Pleas in Michaelmas Term 1802, when that court fully approved the rule so ably laid down by Mr. Justice Lawrence; and determined that the loss must be calculated upon the gross proceeds, and not upon the net proceeds, of the goods insured, at the port of delivery.

Harry v. Roy,
Ex. Off. 3 Bqf.
& Pul. 308.
S. P.

Where there is a partial loss upon a valued policy, but the value in the policy exceeds the interest of the insured, it is the constant usage to adjust a partial loss in the same manner as if the policy were an open one; and the computation must therefore be by the real interest on board, and not by the value in the policy.

If the value in the policy exceeds the interest, the computation must be made by the real interest, not by the value in the policy.

Thus, where an insurance was made on a ship and goods on board,—“At and from Omoa to London; valued at the ‘sum insured.’” There was no value mentioned in the body of the policy, but only the sums wrote against the different names on the back. There were other policies on the same ship and goods, amounting in the whole to 99,500 l. which exceeded the amount of the interest of the insured (a). The ship and a great part of the cargo were lost, about one tenth only of the goods being saved. One question at the trial of this cause was, how the loss, which was considered as a partial one, should be adjusted (b). The broker swore that, on such policies as Le Gras v. Hughes, B. R. E.

22 G. III. MS.

(a) The ship and goods insured had been captured by-sea and land forces jointly. The insurance was on behalf of the officers and crews of the ships; but as the land forces were entitled to a share in this prize, the sum insured though less than the value of the ship and goods, was found to be more than the interest of the insured. Vid. sup. ch. 4. § 1, 2.—
(b) The principal question was, whether the insured had an insurable interest in the ship and goods. For this vid. sup. 108, where there is a fuller report of this case.

this, where a total loss happened, the whole sum was paid : But where it was only a partial loss, they considered it as an open policy, and paid a proportion, not of the sum insured, but of the value of the goods.—The court of King's Bench, when this case came before them, thought it, at first, like that of Lewis v. Rucker (a) But the interest of the insured, in the ship and goods, being less in value than the sum insured, the court held that this case differed from that of Lewis v. Rucker, and that the constant usage in such cases was, upon a total loss, to pay the whole (b) ; but, upon a partial loss, to consider it as an open policy. The court were therefore of opinion that the computation in this case must be by the real interest of the insured on board, and not by the value in the policy.

The true ground of distinction between this case and that of Lewis v. Rucker is, that, in that case, the value in the policy was considered as the prime cost, and this was never disputed ; whereas, in this case, it appears that the interest of the insured was considerably less than the value in the policy.

SECT. III.

What shall be the Effect of an Adjustment.

An adjustment signed by the underwriters is prima facie evidence against them, and sufficient of itself, if not impeached, to entitle the insured to recover without any other proof.

AN adjustment being indorsed on the policy and signed by the underwriters with the promise to pay in a given time, is prima facie evidence against them, and amounts to an admission of all the facts necessary to be proved by the insured to entitle him to recover in an action on the policy. It is like a note of hand, and being proved, the insured has no occasion to go into proof of any other circumstance. This was the opinion of Lord C. J. Lee in the following case.

(a) Sup. 624.—(b) Vid. sup. 287.

An insurance was made on a ship, 'At and from Jamaica to London, interest or no interest, and without benefit of salvage, with a warranty that the ship should sail with convoy.'—The ship sailed with convoy, but was so much damaged in the voyage, that she was obliged to bear away for Charleston, where she was condemned and broke up.—All the underwriters, being satisfied of the truth of this case, paid their losses, except the defendant, who went so far as to settle it, and according to the custom upon such occasions, indorsed the policy in these words;—"Adjusted the loss on this policy at 98l. per cent., which I agree to pay one month after date. London, 5th July 1745. Henry Gouldney."—When the money became due, he insisted on fuller proof, particularly of the ship's sailing with convoy, and her condemnation.—An action was brought on the policy, and Lord C. J. Lee, who tried the cause, was of opinion that this was to be considered as a note of hand, and that the plaintiff had no occasion to enter into the proof of the loss. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.—The same rule was followed, the next year, by the same learned judge, in the case of Hewitt v. Flexney (a).

It has been observed that the words used by Lord Chief Justice Lee, in this case, were extremely large (b); and that the true rule upon the subject might be better collected from two subsequent cases, which will be mentioned hereafter. The words which are supposed to be too large are, "That the memorandum indorsed on the policy, was to be considered as a note of hand, and that the plaintiff had no occasion to enter into the proof of the loss."—It is not easy to discover in what respect the rule here laid down is too large. The memorandum indorsed on the policy, and signed by the defendant, unquestionably amounts to an admission of his subscription to the policy; of the plaintiffs interest in the ship insured, (if the terms of the policy had not rendered that unnecessary); of her having sailed with convoy; of a loss having happened, and that the amount of that Hag v. Gouldney.

at N. P. after Trin. 1745, at
G. H. Beawes
310.

This rule objected to.

The rule vindicated.
The adjustment admits the whole case, and like a note of hand, is prima facie evidence of a debt.

(a) Beawes 308.—(b) Park 118.

It is not, however, conclusive, but may be impeached by evidence.

loss was the sum specified in the adjustment, which contains a promise to pay in one month. This, like a note of hand, is primâ facie evidence of a debt; and it seems to be as unnecessary for the plaintiff, in an action on the policy, to prove the facts admitted by the adjustment, as to prove the consideration of a note of hand, before it is impeached.—But in neither case is “the door shut against inquiry.” A note of hand is not conclusive evidence of a consideration, though value received be expressed in it. On the contrary, it may be impeached by shewing that it was made upon an unlawful, or corrupt consideration, or without any consideration at all. So, an adjustment, like that which is stated in the foregoing case, may be impeached by shewing that the underwriter was induced to sign it by some fraud or concealment, or by some misconception of the law or fact. But, in either case this must be done by evidence, and not by doubts or surmises after the time for payment is come; nor can the plaintiff be put under the necessity of proving the consideration of the note, in the one case, or the facts admitted by the adjustment, in the other, until a strong ground of suspicion, at least, be raised against it by evidence on the part of the defendant.

The adjustment may be given in evidence in an action on the policy; and the insured is not obliged to declare specially on it.

Rodgers v. Mayor, at N. P. after Trin. 1790, Park 118. Sheriff v. Potts, 5 Esp. N. P. Rep. 96. S. P.

It is primâ facie evidence against the underwriter; but he may impeach it.

In the first of the two cases adduced in support of the objection to the rule, as laid down by Lord C. J. Lee, a loss had been adjusted at 50l. per cent., and an action was brought on the policy.—It was contended on the part of the defendant, that the adjustment was not binding; but that, if it were, it ought to have been declared on specially.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, was of opinion that it was not necessary to declare specially. He said that the adjustment was primâ facie evidence against the defendant: But if there had been any misconception of the law or fact upon which it had been made, the underwriter was not absolutely concluded by it.—This turned out to be the case, and there was a verdict for the defendant.

The doctrine of Lord Kenyon, in this case, far from shaking, or even narrowing the rule, as laid down by Lord C. J. Lee, seems, on the contrary, to have strongly confirmed it. Lord Kenyon says, that if there had been any any misconception of the law or fact upon which the adjustment had proceeded, the underwriter would not have been absolutely concluded by it. It is plain, then, that he considered the adjustment like a note of hand, as prima facie evidence of a debt, but not conclusive, since the adjustment, like a note of hand, might be impeached by evidence on the part of the defendant.

In the second case adduced in support of the objection to the rule, as laid down by Lord C. J. Lee, it is stated that the plaintiff went to trial, having no evidence to produce but the adjustment; and the witness who proved it, swore that, soon after they had signed it, doubts arose in the minds of the underwriters, and they refused to pay; upon which, Lord Kenyon said that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff must go into other evidence; and not being able to do this, he was nonsuited.—In the following term, a motion was made to set aside this nonsuit, upon the ground that an adjustment was prima facie evidence of the whole case, and threw the onus probandi upon the underwriter; and that it amounted to more than proof of the defendant's subscription to the policy.—Lord Kenyon said;—"I admit the adjustment to be evidence in the cause to a certain extent: But I thought at the trial, and still think, that when the same witness who proved the signature of the defendant to the adjustment said, that, soon after the adjustment took place, doubts arose in the minds of the underwriters, as to the honesty of the transfusion, and they called for further proof, the plaintiff should have produced other evidence; and that, shutting the door against enquiry, after an adjustment, would be putting a stop to candour and fair dealing amongst the underwriters.—Accordingly the court refused to grant a new trial.

In the account of what passed at the trial of this cause, it does not appear upon what subject the doubts arose in the minds of the underwriters, nor at what time the further proof was called for. It would seem, from the above report, that further proof was only called for at the trial, by the learned judge who tried the cause. It is unfortunate that there is no account of this case in the term reports, the sixth volume of which contains the cases of the term in which

De Garraon v. Galbraith, at N. P. after Trin. 1795. Park 123.

Whether this case can be deemed a sufficient authority to narrow the rule laid down by Lord C. J. Lee.

which it is said to have come before the court. It is to be presumed that an accurate statement of the evidence on which the plaintiff was nonsuited, would have clearly shewn that the decision of the learned judge at nisi prius, and afterwards of the court of King's Bench, was correctly right; that justice was done; and that, under the particular circumstances of the case, this might have been a very proper exception to the rule, as laid down by Lord C. J. Lea. But as the case stands, in the above report of it, it would be very difficult to reconcile it, even to the decision of Lord Kenyon himself, in the above case of Rodgers v. Maylor (a); nor can it be accounted for, upon any known principle of law, that an underwriter, who had signed an adjustment of a loss, with a promise to pay it, might afterwards, merely because he chose to alledge that doubts had arisen in his mind, refuse to pay the sum he had acknowledged to be due; and that, merely on the suggestion of these doubts, the insured should be called upon, at the trial, to prove his whole case, at a time, too, when it was no longer, perhaps, in his power to procure the necessary evidence. The candour and fairness which ought to preside in the litigation of all commercial questions, would never go the length of requiring this. If, indeed, the underwriters, harbouring these doubts, should give the insured reasonable notice of their intention to dispute his claim, it would be competent to them, perhaps, to do so; and even then, they ought to come prepared to shew some fraud or concealment on the part of the insured; or some misconception of the law or the fact, on their own part, which had induced them to agree to the adjustment. This would make an end of the adjustment, and it would then be incumbent on the insured, under whatever difficulty, to go into the proof of his whole case. It is possible, nay, very probable, that this, or something like it, appeared in the case of De Garrou v. Galbraith. But, as that case is reported, it cannot be deemed of sufficient weight or authority to alter or shake the rule as laid down in the case of Hog v. Gouldney; and which, as has been already observed, is greatly enforced and confirmed by Lord Kenyon, in the case of Rodgers v. Maylor (a).

But it is said, that the spirit of the rule laid down in this last case, was adopted in the very modern case of Tbelluson v. Fletcher (b), which has been already fully stated (c). The only point determined in that case at all applicable to the present subject was, that, if an underwriter suffer judgment to go by default, he thereby confesses the plaintiff's title to recover, and the plaintiff shall not, therefore, be obliged to prove his interest; a point about which, without that decision, no lawyer could have entertained much doubt.—All that can be said on this determination is, that, as far as it can be supposed to bear on the present question, it corroborates the rule as laid down by Lord C. J. Lee.

(a) Vid. Christian v. Combe, 1 Esp. Rep. 486, where Lord Kenyon lays down the same doctrine.—(b) Tbelluson v. Fletcher was determined 16 years before the case of De Garron v. Galbraith — (c) Sup. 129.

CHAP. XV.

Of Return of Premium.

THE premium paid by the insured, and the risk which the insurer takes upon himself, are considerations, each for the other: they are co-relatives, whose mutual operation constitutes the essence of the contract of insurance. The insurer shall not be exposed to the risk, without receiving the premium; nor shall he retain the premium, which was the price of the risk, if in fact, he run no risk at all (a). For wherever a man receives the money of another upon a consideration which happens to fail, or is never performed, he is under an obligation, from the ties of moral honesty and natural justice, to refund it. In such case the law implies a debt, quasi ex contractu, and gives the insured an action against the insurer, for money had and received to his use, to recover back the money so received (b).

It will be our business in the present chapter to shew in what cases, and under what circumstances, the insured shall be entitled to a return of premium; and how that return shall be made.—This may be done under the following heads;

- I. Where the contract is void ab initio;
- II. Where the risk has not been commenced;
- III. Upon the performance of certain stipulations;
- IV. When the deduction of one half per cent. shall be allowed.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, 3 Bur. 1240. Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 180.—(b) Vid. 2 Bur. 1008; Doug. 454; Cowp. 668; 1 Show. 156. 3 T. R. 266.

Sect. I.

Of Return of Premium where the Contract is void ab initio.

IN general, when the contract is void ab initio, it is so, either, 1. For want of interest in the insured; or, 2. Because the insurance is illegal; or, 3. For fraud on the one side or the other.—We will enquire in what cases there shall be a return of premium on each of these grounds.

1. Where the Contract is void for Want of Interest.

A want of interest may be either total, as where the insured has nothing on board the ship; or, partial, as where he has an interest in the thing insured, but not to the amount stated in the policy. And it may be laid down as a general rule, that if, through mistake, misinformation, or any other innocent cause, an insurance, in a single policy, be made without any interest whatsoever in the thing insured, or to a much larger amount than its real value; in the one case, the insurer shall return the whole premium; in the other, he shall return in the proportion which the true value bears to the sum insured. Thus, if a man, supposing he has goods on board a certain ship to the value of 1,000*l.* insure to that amount, but afterwards find, either that he has no goods at all on board, or that he has goods only to the amount of half the insurance; In the one case, he would be entitled to a return of the whole premium; in the other to a return of a moiety (a). And all the underwriters upon a policy in which the effects are insured beyond their value, must bear any loss that may happen, and repay a part of the premium, in proportion to their respective subscriptions, without regard to the priority of their dates (a).

If an insurance be made without interest, or for more than the real interest, there shall be a return of premium.

(a) Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 2, art. 18. Ord. of Amst. art. 22. Pothier, h. t. n. 77. 183. Roccus, n. 82. Valin, sur. art. 23, p. 67.

If there be an over-insurance by several policies, the underwriters will all be liable to the extent of the value; and to make a return of premium for the residue.

If, by several policies, made without fraud, the sum insured exceed the value of the effects, these several policies will, in effect, make but one insurance, and will be good to the extent of the true interest of the insured; and, in case of loss, all the underwriters on the several policies shall pay according to their respective subscriptions, without regard to the priority of their dates. And it follows from thence, that all the underwriters on the several policies would be equally bound to make a return of premium for the sum insured above the value of the effects, in proportion to their respective subscriptions.—In this particular, our law, as we have already shewn (b), differs from the ancient law, and indeed from the law of most of the other maritime states at this day.

Upon a wager policy the insured cannot recover back the premium, at least after the risk is run.

We have already seen that a wager policy, at least since the stat. 19 G. II., c. 37, is illegal and void (c). Upon such a policy the insured cannot recover back the premium; at least if he wait till the risk is over, he shall not, after thus taking the chance of a loss, and of obtaining from the generosity, at least, of the underwriters, the sum insured, be permitted to recover back the premium.

Loroy & anr. v. Bourdieu, Doug. 451.

An insurance on an East India ship and goods, valued at 26,000*l.* 'being the amount of the captain's bond to the insured,' is a wager and void; but the insured shall not, after the risk is run, have a return of premium.

The plaintiffs had lent one Lawson, captain of the Lord Holland Indiaman, 26,000*l.*, for which he gave them a common bond. While he was with his ship at China, the plaintiffs got a policy underwritten by the defendant and others, 'At and from China to London, beginning the adventure upon the goods, from the loading thereof on board the said ship at Canton, &c.' and 'upon the said ship from her arrival at Canton, valued at 26,000*l.* being the amount of Captain Patrick Lawson's common bond payable to the parties, as shall be described at the back of

(a) Habet omnis, assicuratio hoc peculiare, ut in ea non sit prius nec posterius, quantum ad effectum et validitatem contractus; sed ultimus affecurator tantundem participat in damno et lucro ex affecuratione proveniente, quantum prior. Kuricke diatr. n. 16.—

(b) Vid. sup. 146.—(c) Vid. sup. ch. 4. § 2.

' this

‘ this policy, dated 16th of December 1775: And in case ‘ of loss, no other proof of interest to be required than ‘ the exhibition of the said bond; warranted free from ‘ average, and without benefit of salvage to the insurers.’
 —At the head of the subscription was written, “ On a ‘ bond as above expressed.”—Captain Lawson sailed from China and arrived safe with his adventure in London.—
 The insured brought an action to recover back the premium, on the ground that the insurance having been made without interest, the policy was void, within the statute (a). There was a verdict for the defendant by the direction of Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the court held that the verdict was right.—Lord Mansfield said,—“ This is clearly a gaming policy. The nature of the insurance is known to both parties. The plaintiffs say; ‘ We mean to game;
 ‘ but we give our reason for it; captain Lawson owes us a ‘ sum of money, and we want to be secure in case he should ‘ not be in a situation to pay us.’ It was a hedge. But they had no interest; for, if the ship had been lost, and the underwriters had paid, still the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover the amount of the bond from Lawson.—This, then, is a gaming policy, and against an act of parliament; and therefore it is clear that the court will not interfere to assist either party; according to the well-known rule, that, in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis: Not, that the defendant’s right is better than that of the plaintiff; but he must draw his remedy from clear fountains.—Mr. Justice Asbush concurred in this opinion. Mr. J. Willes thought this was not a gaming policy; that the money was paid upon a mistaken idea, and ought to have been refunded.—Mr.
 Justice Buller agreed with Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Asbush, that this was a gaming policy, being without interest: But he held that the reason why the plaintiffs could not recover was, that an action brought to rescind a contract, must be brought while the contract continues executory; and then it can only be done on the terms of

Yet, before the risk is run, and while the contract is execu-tory, the insured may recover back his premium.

(a) 19 G. II. c. 37. sup. 127.

restoring the other party to his original situation. He mentioned a case of Walker v. Chapman, in B. R. some years before, where a sum of money had been paid in order to procure a place in the customs. The place had not been procured, and the party who paid the money, having brought his action to recover it back; it was held that he should recover, because the contract remained executory. "So," said he, "if the plaintiffs in this case had brought an action before the risk was over, they might have recovered; but having waited till the risk was run, it was then too late (a) "

The reader, in perusing the foregoing case, must have observed that though Mr. Justice Buller concurs in opinion with Lord Mansfield, that the insured was not, under all the circumstances of the case, entitled to a return of premium, yet he assigns a different reason for his opinion.—Lord Mansfield considered the insurance as an illegal contract, and both parties offenders against (a) There is a case of Wharton v. De la Rive, (at N. P. after Mich. 1782), mentioned in Park 376, where an action is said to have been brought on two wagers, 'one of 26l. 5s. to 100 l.; the other of 13l. 2s. 6d. to 30l.' that the American colonies would be acknowledged as independent states by France, some time between the first of February and the first of April 1778. It is stated that, upon the opening of the case for the plaintiff, Lord Mansfield directed a nonsuit, but it does not appear upon what ground; whether because the wagers were illegal, or because they were in nature of wagering insurances, and void by the act. It is said, however, that the plaintiff's counsel insisted on a verdict for the premium, as if they were in fact insurances, which Lord Mansfield permitted, upon the ground of the contract being void. The case of Lowry v. Bourdieu was then cited by the defendant's counsel, to shew that he was entitled to keep the premium. Lord Mansfield is made to answer, that that case did not apply; for there the risk had been run.—But that could not distinguish it from the case before his lordship; because, if these wagers were to be considered as insurances, the risk was over on the first of April 1778, five years before the action was brought. Nay, the action was brought on the ground that the plaintiff had won his wager.

the

the law; and then founds his judgment on the maxim; in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis; from which it may be inferred that it was his lordship's opinion; that; even if the insured had thought proper to rescind the contract before the risk commenced, or, which is the same thing, before the event was known, he could not have recovered back the premium.—Mr. Justice Buller takes a different ground; namely, that though an action might have been maintained to recover back the premium while the contract was executory, upon the terms of restoring the underwriter to his original situation; yet, that; after the risk is run, it is too late to attempt to rescind the contract.

In the case of Vandyk v. Hewet, which we shall presently have occasion to mention more particularly, the court of King's Bench seems to have adopted the principle upon which Lord Mansfield founded his judgment: It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Justice Buller's doctrine could apply only to the case of an insurance without interest, innocently made.

Upon the authority of this case it has since been determined, that if the contract be void, as being a re-insurance, within the stat. 19 G. II., c. 37, § 4, the insured shall not be entitled to a return of premium (a).

If the contract be void, as being a re-insurance, there shall be no return.

If, under any circumstances, the insurer might, at any time, have been called upon to pay the whole sum insured, the premium is earned, and he shall not be obliged to return any part of it. Therefore, in the case of a valued policy, though the sum in the policy be twice the value of the effects insured, there shall be no return of premium (b).

If the insurer could ever have been liable, there shall be no return.

If the insured have a contingent insurable interest in the thing insured at the time when the policy is effected, and the risk be once begun, there shall be no return of premium, though it should eventually turn out that he had no title to the thing insured. Therefore, though the

If captors insure before condemnation, they shall not have a return on its being adjudged no prize;

(a) R. André v. Fletcher, 3 T. R. 266. Sup. 144.—
 (b) 2 Magers, 137.

captors of a ship, seized as prize, have an insurable interest therein before condemnation; yet, should the ship afterwards be adjudged to be no prize, and restitution be awarded to the owners, there shall be no return of premium, if the risk was commenced.

*Noehm and others
v. Bell, & T. R.
154*

Thus :—Three frigates having taken the ship Westcapelle off the Cape of Good Hope, then bound from Batavia to Boston, the captors put her under the command of a lieutenant, as prize-master, and on the 30th of January 1797, wrote to their agents in England, mentioning the capture of the Westcapelle, which they supposed a lawful prize; and stating that, as there was no court of admiralty there, they were under the necessity of sending her to England for trial; and then directed an insurance, for that voyage, to be made on the ship and cargo, to the amount of 40,000*l.* (though the estimated value was 150,000*l.*) which the agents in England accordingly caused to be effected at a premium of 20 guineas per cent. to return 8*l.* per cent. if the ship departed from the Cape or St. Helena, with convoy for England, and arrived. The ship sailed from the Cape with convoy for St. Helena, where she arrived, and sailed from thence for England, without convoy, and arrived in safety in the Thames on the 7th of August 1797. But the court of admiralty declared the ship and cargo to be American property, and decreed them to be restored, except the part claimed by the chief mate, who was pronounced to be an enemy, and his property on board condemned as lawful prize.' The ship and cargo, except the part of the chief mate, were restored accordingly. After this sentence, the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant, to recover 18*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* per cent. as a proportion of the premium to be returned in respect of the ship and such part of the cargo as had been decreed to be restored. The defendant insisted, 1*st.* That the insured had an insurable interest to the amount of the sum insured, and, in the event of a loss, might have recovered against the insurers; that the fallacy of the plaintiff's argument arose from not distinguishing between an insurable interest and an absolute indefeasible property; that the insured had the possession of the thing insured, together with a contingent contingent interest, in the event of its being condemned ; besides, they had an immediate interest in the subject matter, arising out of their responsibility for the care and safety of the ship ; for in case of gross negligence or misconduct, the court of admiralty would adjudge a compensation to the owners in damages ; and if, in any event, the insurers might have been answerable, there could be no return of premium. 2dly, That this being a valued policy, made bond fide, without any intention of fraud, and the insured having an indisputable interest, the extent of the interest was immaterial. 3dly, That as this was an insurance on foreign ships, it was not necessary that the insured should have any interest at all, it not being within the stat. 19 G. II., c. 37.—The court were clearly of opinion that the insured had an insurable interest, and that the risk having been run, there could be no return of premium.—Lord Kenyon said,—“ I will not enter into a discussion of either of the two last points, because the first alone furnishes, in my opinion, an answer to this action. —The real question in this case is one of the most simple that can be stated. It is merely this, whether the insured had or had not any interest. The captors had the possession of the property insured, and from that possession certain rights and duties resulted. If it were a legal capture, the captors were entitled ; if not, they were liable to be called to an account in the court of admiralty, where they might be amerced in damages and costs. It was important, therefore, to them to take care that there should be something forthcoming to answer for the amount of these damages.”

2. Where the Insurance is upon an illegal Trading.

It has already been shewn (a) that no British subject can legally carry on any commerce with the enemies of the state, without the King's licence ; and that an insurance made to protect such commerce is void ; and it has

Though an insurance to protect a trading with the enemy void, there sh be no return premium.

(a) Sup. ch. 3. § 4.

been determined that the insured, in such case, cannot recover back his premium: And though this was after a loss had happened, it was after the insurers had availed themselves of the illegality of the contract to avoid paying the loss, and it was founded upon the same principle upon which Lord Mansfield supported his judgment in the case of Lowry v. Bourdieu (a), which would have maintained the decision in that case, even if the action had been brought while the contract was executory.

*Lowry & others
v. Bourdieu, 1 East
96.*

Thus:—Goods were insured, ‘At and from London to Embden or Amsterdam, at a premium of ten guineas per cent., to return five upon their arrival at their place of destination.’—In an action on this policy for a loss by capture, it was averred in the declaration that the insurance was made for the benefit of certain persons therein named.—Upon the trial it appeared that the goods were shipped on board a Prussian neutral vessel, on account, partly of the plaintiffs who were naturalized foreigners resident in London, and partly of certain other persons, aliens, then resident in Holland. It appearing that the insurance was intended to cover a trading with Holland, then at war with this kingdom, the idea of recovering the loss was given up on the authority of the case of Potts v. Bell (b).—The plaintiffs then contended that they were entitled to recover back the premium, on the ground that the policy never attached, and the risk had therefore never commenced. And it was compared to the case of Lacausade v. White (c), in which it was determined that a person who has deposited money upon an illegal wager may recover it back, even after the event is determined against him.—But the court were clearly of opinion, that the plaintiffs had no right to recover back the premium.—Lord Kenyon said;—“There is no distinguishing this case, on principle; from the common case of a smuggling transaction. Where the vendor assists the vendee in running the goods to evade the laws of the country, he cannot recover back the goods themselves or the value of them (a). Both parties are in pari delicto, and potior est conditio possidentis."

(a) Sup. 640 — (b) 8 T. R. 548, sup. 87. — (c) 7 T. R. 535. — But Vid. 8 T. R. 575, where it was held that if the money deposited upon an illegal wager be paid over to the winner, it cannot be recovered back.

It has also been shewn (b), that no insurance can be legally made on an illegal trading with the British colonies. — And it is clearly binding upon all British subjects, who are not permitted to plead ignorance of British laws: In the following case, it was made a question, whether this rule was applicable to the case of foreigners, who cannot be presumed to possess a knowledge of our laws, and determined in the affirmative.

A policy was effected upon goods warranted Danish property, on board a Danish ship, 'At and from Bengal,' (in which were several Danish as well as British settlements) 'to Copenhagen, with liberty to touch, stay, and 'trade at all ports and places, &c.'—The goods insured were loaded at Calcutta, and the ship and cargo, in the voyage to Copenhagen, were captured by the French.—In an action to recover for this loss, it was objected that, by the navigation act, 12 C. II. c. 18. § 1, (c), it was unlawful to export goods from any British colony, in any vessel not belonging to a British subject. This objection prevailing, it was then insisted that if the exportation was illegal, the risk never commenced, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to a return of premium; and it was urged that if, in any case, the court would presume a party to have been ignorant of the law, they might well do so in this, since, previous to the shipment in question, a practice had prevailed of allowing ships belonging to states in amity with Great Britain, to export goods from our settlements in India; in so much, that the stat. 37 G. III. c. 117, which passed only four months after this cargo was shipped, removed, under certain restrictions, the Morck & anr. v. Abel, 3 Bif. & Pai 25.

The insured in a policy upon an illegal trading with the British colonies is not entitled to a return of premium though he be a foreigner, and not presumed to be acquainted with our laws.

(a) Vid. Biggs v. Lawrence, 3 T. R. 454. Clugas v. Penaluna, 4 T. R. 466. Waymell v. Reed, 5 T. R. 599.—(b) Ch. 3. § 2.—(c) Sup. 63.

prohibition imposed by the stat. 12 C. II.—But the court determined that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a return of premium.—They held, that no man, in a British court of justice, can seek the assistance of the law, who founds his claim upon a contravention of the British laws; that the plaintiffs being foreigners did not take them out of the general rule applicable to illegal contracts; and that there was very little room to presume ignorance of a law peculiarly applicable to the subjects of foreign states.

Iuback v. Potts,
7 Eq. 449.
—
S. P.

So, where an insurance upon colonial produce, from Trinidad to Gibraltar, was holden to be illegal, as being against the navigation acts, it was determined that the insured was not entitled to a return of premium, though he did not appear to have been aware that the voyage was illegal.

3. When there is Fraud on the one Side or the other.

If the policy be void for fraud on the part of the insurer, the premium shall be returned.

When the policy is void on account of fraud committed by the insurer, there can be no doubt but that an action will lie to recover back the premium. As if an insurance be made on a certain voyage, lost or not lost, when the insurer, at the time he enters into the contract, privately knows that the ship is arrived safe; he will be bound to restore the premium (a).

Whether this be so, where fraud has been committed by the insured.

But, whether the insurer be bound to return the premium, in a case where fraud has been committed by the insured, is a question upon which more doubt might be entertained.—On the one hand, it might be contended that as the underwriter receives the premium in consideration of his taking upon himself the risk mentioned in the policy, he can have no right to retain it, if no risk was ever run; and, however improperly or unfairly the insured may have conducted himself, that will not furnish a new consideration to the underwriter, to be substituted in the place of that which was expressed in the policy, so as to enable him to retain the premium.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, in Carter v. Boehm, 3 Bur. 1909, Sup. 465, 6.

On the other hand, it might be deemed a sort of solecism in our law, if the insured could, by paying a premium, take the chance of reaping the proposed advantage from a fraudulent insurance; and yet, when detected, be entitled to recover back his premium, and so suffer no loss. It has been said, indeed, that the idea of enriching one man by the punishment of another is a strange one, and somewhat inconsistent with the present notions of criminal justice (a).—But this idea is not strange in our law; for it pervades all our statutes in which penalties are given to common informers. It is true that the legislature gives these penalties, not for the sake of enriching the informers, but to tempt them, by the hopes of enriching themselves, to bring offenders to justice. When a penalty is given to the party grieved, it is given for the express purpose of enriching him by the punishment of the wrongdoer. Upon the same principle, a security given to a lender upon an usurious contract is declared void by the stat. 12 Ann. c. 16, § 1.; and yet the borrower, who is a party to the illegal contract, shall never be obliged to repay it. Nor is this principle confined to the statute law; for, by the common law, the vendor of smuggled goods shall not be allowed to recover the price of them from the vendee, though he be far from innocent of the fraud against the revenue (b). Many other instances might be adduced from the common law to shew that one party shall be permitted to enrich himself by the punishment of another, even where they are both in pari delicto (c). And it would seem from the opinion of Lord Mansfield in Lowry v. Bourdieu (d), and that of Lord Kenyon in Vandyk v. Hewit (e), that, in the case of a gaming policy, the insured cannot recover back his premium, even where the risk has never been commenced: How much stronger, then, in point of justice, is the claim of an innocent underwriter, to retain the premium of an insurance, by which the insured meant to defraud him; and which is some satisfaction for the risk he has run, though not an adequate punishment of the insured, for his meditated fraud.

(a) Park 215.—(b) Vid. 3 T. R. 454; 4 T. R. 466; 5 T. R. 599.—(c) Vid. 3 T. R. 454, Cowp. 343.—(d) Sup. 640.—(e) Sup. 646.

It has been determined that there shall be a return, if the contract be void for the fraud of the insured.

But reasonable and just as this idea may seem, it has not always prevailed. The court of chancery, in two instances, ordered a return of premium where the policies were declared void for fraud committed by the insured.

Wittingham v. Thoroughgood, 2 Ferr. 206. Pr. in ch. 20.

The first of these cases was an insurance on the life of one Horwell, for a year, interest or no interest. The insured, in order to draw in subscribers, agreed with one Marwood, a neighbour of Horwell's, an eminent merchant who was a leading man in such cases, to subscribe first; but he was to lose nothing, in case Horwell died within the year, but, on the contrary, was to share what should be gained from the other subscriptions. Upon the credit of Marwood's subscribing, several others, (who had enquired of him about Horwell), subscribed likewise. Horwell lived but four months. A bill was brought to be relieved against the policy; and it appearing that the insured had no interest in the life of Horwell, who was in a languishing condition at the time the insurance was effected, the court decreed the policy to be delivered up to be cancelled; but the premium was to be repaid, the plaintiffs deducting their costs thereout.

De Costa v. Scanderet, 2 P. W. 170. 10 P. 351. S. P.

The other case was an insurance on a ship, where the insured was guilty of a fraudulent concealment, for which the court of chancery ordered the policy to be delivered up to be cancelled; but, in like manner, directed the premium to be paid back, and allowed out of the costs.

Wilson v. Duckett, 3 Bur. 1361.

The same doctrine adopted in a court of law.

This rule of the court of chancery, was first adopted at law, upon the authority of the above two cases, in an action brought on a policy of insurance on a ship, with a count for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use.—The cause was tried under a decree of the court of Chancery, where the insured, (being then plaintiff), offered to pay back the premium which was 10l.; but no money was paid into court in this action.—There was a verdict for the plaintiff for the

101. premium, on the count for money had and received, although the jury found the policy to have been fraudulent. In fact, in this, as in the foregoing case of Wittingham v. Thornburgh, the first underwriter was only a decoy-duck to mislead others, and was not himself to be bound by the policy.—But it was agreed to bring before the court this question,—“Whether, upon a policy being found fraudulent, the premium should be returned.”—In support of the affirmative, the two last mentioned cases were cited on the part of the insured. On the other side was mentioned a case of Rucker v. Hollingbury before the Master of the Rolls, who held an opinion contrary to those cases.—But Lord Mansfield said there must have been some mistake in the statement of this case; for the practice of the court of Chancery was certainly agreeable to the former cases: He then enquired whether there was any common law determination to the same effect, and it not appearing that there was, he said it was plain what must be done in this case: For he looked upon the offer made by the underwriter’s bill in equity to be the same thing as if the money had been actually brought into court in the present cause: Therefore the verdict for the plaintiff was set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant.

It has been said, however, of this case, “that a trial being had under a decree of the court of Chancery, and the insurer having there made an offer of returning the premium, the court of King’s Bench considered the offer in the same light as if he had paid the money into court, and therefore the question remained undecided (a). But, from the mode of disposing of this case, it is plain that, if the underwriter had not done what was deemed equivalent to bringing the money into court, there would have been a verdict against him for the premium. The court, therefore, clearly decided that the insured was entitled to a return of premium. And this decision had the more weight as it may be fairly concluded, from the gross misconduct of the insured, and from the expedient adopted by the court to oust him of the costs at law, that this point was decided in his favour with much reluctance.

(a) Park in index tit. Return of Premium.

But the courts now hold a contrary doctrine.

Tyler v. Hara,
at N. P. after
Hil. 1/85, Park,
218.

But, be that as it may, Lord Mansfield, upon better reflection, saw at length, the impolicy, not to say injustice, of permitting the insured to take his chance of defrauding the underwriters, without the risk of losing his premium.—Therefore, where an action was brought on a policy for a total loss, and it appeared to the satisfaction of the jury, that the plaintiff had given the order to his broker to get the insurance effected, after he had received information of the loss of the ship, the jury found a verdict for the defendant; and Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, said the fraud was so gross, that the plaintiff ought not to recover the premium from the underwriters.

The fraud was certainly very gross in this case, but not more gross than in each of the three foregoing cases, which we have cited.

Shapman and others, assignees of Kennes v. Fraser, B.R. Tr. 33 G. 113.

But this important question has been since finally settled in a case which came before the court of King's Bench, and where the fraud had been committed, not by the insured himself, but by his agent; and the whole court were of opinion that, in all cases of actual fraud, on the part of the insured, committed either by himself or his agent, the underwriter shall retain the premium.

SECT. II.

Where the Risk has not been commenced.

Foreign authors deny that the insured can dissolve the contract, and demand a return of premium.

All the foreign authors agree that insurance is a conditional contract, that the risk is of the essence of it, and that the premium is the price of the risk to be run: And yet, many of them hold that the insured is not permitted to dissolve the contract by his own act; and therefore if he relinquish the intended voyage, the insurer is not

not bound to return the premium, and that he has a right to demand it, if it has not been already paid (a).—They except only the case where it becomes impossible for the insured to ship the goods, or to cause the ship to proceed on her voyage (b).

But the rules which prevail in Holland and France are more conformable to the nature of the contract of insurance. In Holland, if the goods insured should not be shipped, or should appear to be of less value than the sum insured, the insured may, in the one case, demand a return of the whole premium, in the other, a return for what is over-insured (c).—In France, if a stop be put to the voyage before the ship sails, even by the act of the insured,

In Holland and France, the law is different.

(a) An affecurator teneatur restituere pretium, cò quod in navi non fuerunt merces? Videbatur teneri affecurator ad restitutionem pretii recepti ob causam illius periculi; tamen in contrarium est veritas, quòd non solum non teneatur pretium restituere, imò possit petere illud; et ratio est, quia licet emptio periculi non teneat in præjudicium promissoris, tamen in ejus favorem, et in præjudicium, affecurati falsa assertio bene tenet. Sic etiam quia illa causa cessat, factò domini mercium, cò quod nullas merces misit in navem, et non factò affecuratori, per quem non fletit. Roccus, h. t. not. 11, 13, 14, 82, 88; vid. Santerna, part. 3. n. 19, 20, 22; Straccha gl. 6. Casaregis, disc. 1, n. 53, 58.—(b) In casibus in quibus impeditur navigatio, putà si navis sit combusta in portu, vel destructa, vel rex eam capiat pro necessitatibus publicis, et impeditur conditio affecurationis: quia tunc non possit imputari conditionis defectus magis uni, quam alteri parti, nullus tenebitur; et pretium periculi non potest peti, et solum repetitur, quasi causà non secutà. Roccus, h. t. not. 15, 56.—Si, ex aliquo impedimento, affecuratus non potuisset merces suas onerare, tunc contractus affecurationis locum non haberet, ita ut si pretium affecurationis fuisset solum, repeti certo poterit per affecuratum. Casaregis disc. 1, n. 182, disc. 62, n. 4. Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 9. art. 16, which is nearly to the same effect. Vid. Ord. of Antwerp, art. 16. 2 Magens 27. Locennius, lib. 2, ch. 5, n. 16.—(c) Ord. of Amsterdam, art. 23, 2 Mag. 136.

the insurance becomes void, and the insurer shall return the premium (a).

In England, if the risk be not begun, to whatever cause this be owing, the premium shall be returned.

In England, the rule is, that where the risk has not been begun, whether this be owing to the fault, pleasure, or will of the insured, or to any other cause, except fraud, the premium shall be returned. The reason is, that a policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity; the underwriter receives the premium for running the risk of indemnifying the insured; and therefore, if he run no risk, to whatever cause, except fraud, this may be imputable, the consideration for which the premium was paid to him fails, and he ought to return it (b).

Where the policy is void, and there is no fraud imputable to the plaintiff, he is entitled to a return of premium.

If the contract be void, on account of a non-compliance with any warranty, express or implied; as if the ship do not sail on the day prescribed, or do not depart with convoy, or be not sea-worthy, and there be no fraud imputable to the insured, he shall be entitled to a return of premium; because the contract never attached, and the risk, therefore, never commenced. In such case, it is always advisable for the defendant, in an action on the policy, to bring the premium into court; otherwise the insured will have the advantage of trying the question on the validity of the contract, without the peril of costs; for, at the worst, he will be sure of a verdict for the premium (c). And it is not unusual when the jury have brought in their verdict for the defendant, on the only question submitted to them, for the plaintiff's counsel to claim a verdict for the premium, upon the count for money had and received.

When the plaintiff is entitled to a return of premium, he may claim a verdict for it, even after the jury have delivered their verdict for the defendant, on the principal question.

Indeed it has been the constant practice, for the plaintiff's counsel to abstain from any mention of the premium, where he means to claim a loss; because, by setting up a demand for the premium, he confesses a doubt, at least, of his being able to sustain his principal claim; and throwing out such a doubt, in a case already, perhaps, *doubtful,

(a) Ord. of Louis XIV. h. t. art. 37. Vid. Emerig. tom. 2, p. 154. Pothier, h. t. n. 178, 179. — (b) Per Lord Mansfield, in Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. 668. — (c) Vid. inf. cli. 16. § 4.

doubtful, may raise a prejudice very injurious to his client's interest. And it may be said, moreover, in favour of this practice, that the defendant may come prepared to dispute the plaintiff's claim to a return of premium, and may prove fraud, which will not be inconsistent with any other defence he may have to make; whereas it often happens that the plaintiff's claim to a return of premium rests on the very case made by the defendant (a).

If the question of return of premium be not agitated at the trial, and a verdict be taken for the plaintiff for the loss, subject to the opinion of the court upon any point that may be reserved, and that point be decided against the plaintiff; it will then be too late to set up his claim to a verdict for the premium; for the court cannot find a new verdict, or substitute any other sum in lieu of that which the jury gave in damages (b).

If the insurance be upon a voyage which is divisible into several distinct risks, which are, in effect, several distinct voyages, the premium may be apportioned according to these several risks; and in case one or more of those risks should not have been commenced, the proportion of premium applicable to those parts shall be returned.

Thus:—A ship was insured, ‘At five guineas per cent. lost or not lost, at and from London to Halifax, warranted to depart with convoy from Portsmouth for the voyage.’—Before the ship arrived at Portsmouth, the convoy was gone. Notice of this was immediately given to the underwriters, who were desired, either to make the long insurance, or return part of the premium. They refused, and the insured brought an action to recover a part of the premium. At the trial, a case was reserved for the opinion of the court, stating the above facts, and also stating, that the jury found that the usual and set-

But the court will not, on setting aside a verdict for a loss, substitute a verdict for the premium.

Where the voyage and premium are divisible, and any part not begun, the premium for that part shall be returned.

Stephenson v. Snow, 3 Bur. 1237.

A ship is insured at and from London to Halifax, warranted to depart with convoy from Portsmouth, at five guineas per cent. On her arrival at Portsmouth, she finds the convoy gone. Notice of this is immediately given to the insurers:—The premium shall be apportioned.

(a) Vid. Penfon v. Lee, 2 Bos. & Pul. 330, in which this question was very much debated. — (b) R. Nesbit v. Whitmore, 1 East 97; n.

tled premium from London to Portsmouth was one and a half per cent. which the plaintiff offered to allow the defendant to retain; and that it was usual for the underwriters, in such cases, to return part of the premium: But the quantum was uncertain, and must in its nature be so; because it depended upon uncertain circumstances.—Upon this case, the court were unanimously of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.—Lord Mansfield said,— “These contracts are to be taken with great latitude: The strict letter is not so much to be regarded as the object and intention of the parties. Equity implies a condition that the insurer shall not receive the price of running a risk, if he run none. The premium is without consideration, as to the voyage from Portsmouth to Halifax; and then this case is within the general principle of actions for money had and received. I do not go upon the usage, which is only that, in like cases, a part of the premium is returned, without ascertaining what part. If the risk be not run, though it be by the neglect, or even the fault, of the insured, yet the insurer shall not retain the premium. It has been objected that the voyage being begun, and part of the risk already run, the premium cannot be apportioned: But I can see no force in this. This is not a contract so entire that there can be no apportionment: For there are two parts in it, and the premium may be divided into two distinct parts relative, as it were, to two distinct voyages. The practice shews that it has been usual, in such cases, to return a part of the premium, though the quantum be not ascertained: And, indeed, the quantum must vary as circumstances vary. But though the quantum has not been ascertained; yet the principle is agreeable to the general sense of mankind.”—Mr. Justice Denison, and Mr. Justice Foster, concurred in this opinion.—Mr. Justice Wilmot said,—
 “The usage to return a part of the premium, in such cases, is a strong proof of the equity of the thing; and nothing can be more just and reasonable. If the risk be once begun, the insured shall not deviate or return back, and then say, I will go no further under this contract, but will have my premium returned. Upon this policy, there are two distinct points of time, in effect two voyages, ages, which were clearly in the contemplation of the parties; and only one of the two voyages was made, the other was not at all entered upon, nor was the risk ever begun (a)."

In the following case, though the facts did not enable the court to pronounce any definitive judgment upon this point; yet, in sending it back to a new trial, an opinion was delivered which tends to strengthen the authority of the above decision.

An insurance was made on the ship Manning, 'At ' and from Hull to Bilboa, warranted to depart from England with convoy.'—The ship sailed from Hull to Portsmouth, and from thence departed with convoy; but this not being direct for Bilboa, she left it, and was afterwards captured.—In an action on this policy, upon the above facts coming out in evidence, the plaintiff would have been nonsuited; but his counsel insisted that he was entitled to a return of premium; and there being a count in the declaration for money had and received, and no money paid into court, a verdict was given for the plaintiff for the whole premium.—Upon a motion to set aside this verdict and enter a nonsuit, it was contended on the part of the defendant that, as the risk had commenced, the plaintiff could not be entitled to any return of premium.—On the part of the plaintiff, it was insisted that there were two distinct voyages in this case; the one from Hull to the place of rendezvous, and the other from thence to Bilboa, the port of discharge; that the risks were of different natures, one being without, the other with, convoy; and that, as the latter was never begun, the plaintiff must at all events be entitled to a return of a proportion of the premium on that account.—

Rothwell v. Coote,
1 Bof. & Pul.
172.

A ship is insured from Hull to Bilboa, warranted to depart from England with convoy. The voyages from Hull to Portsmouth, the place of rendezvous, and from thence to Bilboa, may be considered as distinct; and in case the ship sails without convoy, and is taken, the premium may be apportioned, and a part returned.

(a) Vid. Lord Mansfield's observations on this case, (Cowp. 669, inf. 655), in which he labours to vindicate the decision of it, by shewing that the grounds of it were, that the voyage was in fact two voyages, and that the contract comprised two distinct conditions. Vid. also the observations on this and the other cases on this point. 1 Bof. & Pul. 174.

The court directed the verdict to be set aside, and granted a new trial, being of opinion that if the underwriters were not entitled to retain the whole premium, yet, having ran the risk from Hull to Portsmouth, they were at least entitled to retain a proportion of it, if, upon a further investigation, it should turn out that the voyage was divisible, and that the premium in such cases had ever been apportioned (a).

Yet, upon an insurance "at and from" a place, the risk is not divisible.

Yet, where an insurance is made on a ship, 'At and from' her port of departure, and warranted to sail on or before a given day, and the ship does not sail within the time required by the warranty, by which the insurer is discharged; it has been holden that the risk at and from the port of departure is entire, and not divisible into two distinct risks, and that, therefore, the premium cannot be apportioned, so as to entitle the insured to any return.

Meyer v. Gregson, B. R. East 24 G. III. MS.

A ship is insured "at and from Jamaica to Liverpool, warranted to sail on or before the first of August; premium 20 guineas per cent. to return 8 guineas if she sailed with convoy." She did not sail till September:—The insured shall only be entitled to 8 guineas per cent. for convoy, and not to an apportionment of the rest of the premium.

Thus:—A ship was insured 'At and from Jamaica to Liverpool, warranted to sail on or before the first of August; premium 20 guineas per cent. to return 8, if she sailed with convoy.'—The ship did not sail till September, and was lost in the voyage.—The warranty, as to the time of sailing, not being complied with, the underwriters were discharged from the risk after the first of August, and an action was brought by the insured for a return of premium.—The defendant, who was an underwriter for 100l., paid 8 guineas into court, being the sum to be returned, if the ship sailed with convoy.—The jury apportioned the premium, and gave 8 guineas more for the risk from Jamaica to Liverpool; which they considered as not having been commenced; thus allowing 4 guineas for the risk "at Jamaica."—The defendant moved to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit, upon the ground that he risk was entire, the premium entire, and the voyage indivisible.—Lord Mansfield, Mr. Justice Ashurst, and Mr. Justice Buller, (against the opinion of Mr. Justice Willes, who thought with the jury, that the premium should be apportioned), determined

(a) This, upon memory, seems to be the result of what was done by the court, though not fully expressed in the printed report.

that

that the insured was not entitled to recover more than had been paid into court.—Lord Mansfield said,—“It would be endless to go into an enquiry about the value of the risk “at Jamaica,” which is different at different sides of the island: The parties divided the risk, as to convoy; for 8 guineas were to be returned if the ship failed with convoy. Independent of that, it was an insurance “At and from Jamaica to London,” at 12 guineas per cent. with an absolute warranty to sail “on or before the 1st of August,” and nothing is said from whence it can be inferred that it was meant that there should be two risks, or by which the risk at Jamaica could be distinctly estimated (a).” — Mr. Justice Buller said,—“As the parties have not considered it as two risks, nor estimated the risk “at Jamaica,” neither the court or jury have any right to do it for them. In all the insurances from Jamaica, the policy runs “at and from,” and though in many instances, the voyage has not been commenced, yet there never was an idea of any part of the premium being returned; and no usage to do so has been found by the jury.”

Upon an insurance at and from a place, an usage should be proved to warrant a division of the risk.

In a subsequent term the following case came before the same court; and though the point was not decided by the judges, yet Lord Mansfield, in directing a new trial, laid down the principle, which he conceived ought to govern these cases, in terms which seem more reconcilable to the case of Stevenson v. Snow (b) than to the last cited case of Meyer v. Gregson.

A ship was insured ‘At and from any port or ports ‘ in Jamaica to London, following and commencing from Gal v. Mack II,

B. R. Lest.
25 G. III.

(a) Lord Mansfield, in delivering his opinion in the case of Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. 670, inf. 662. seems to have entertained a different sentiment on this point. He then inclined to think that if the words of the policy were “at and from, provided the ship shall sail on or before the 1st of August,” it would fall within the reasoning of Stevenson v. Snow, and that there would then be two parts, or contracts, of insurance, with distinct conditions. But this can only be considered as an extra-judicial opinion expressed very doubtfully. — (b) Sup. 655.

A ship insured at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to sail with convoy, arrives too late at the place of rendezvous for the convoy, but follows and overtakes them:—Whether there shall be a return of premium.

‘ her first arrival there; warranted to sail with convoy
 ‘ for the voyage, from the place of rendezvous.’—The ship did not get to the place of rendezvous in time to sail with the convoy,—but failed after, and overtook them; so that the warranty was not complied with, and the underwriters were discharged from the time of the ship’s failing.—The insured brought an action to recover back a part of the premium for the voyage from Jamaica.—At the trial, an usage seemed to have been proved, that when the ship was not out of the port of Jamaica, the allowance was one-half per cent. In other cases it was arbitrary, and two or three per cent. was reasonable. There was a verdict for the plaintiff. Upon a motion for a new trial, the counsel differed as to the facts that were in evidence, and the cause was sent back to a new trial, without the question of law having been much discussed.—Lord Mansfield, however, said, that where there is a contingency in the voyage, the risk may be divided. That the reason why there are not two policies in such cases was, that the risk “at,” is capable of exact computation. He said the former cases upon this point were contradictory.

Where there is a contingency in the voyage, the risk may be divided.

In the same term the following case was determined : And though the judges seem to have laid great stress on the usage found by the jury, to return the premium, deducting one half per cent. upon insurances, at and from Jamaica, with a warranty to depart with convoy, or to sail on or before a given day, and the warranty is not complied with; and though it is distinguished from the case of Meyer v. Gregson on this ground; yet it cannot be denied that the authority of that case is greatly shaken by it.

Long v. Allen,
 B. R. East 25 G.
 III MS.

Goods are insured “ At and from Jamaica to London, warranted to depart with convoy before the 1st of August.” The ship sails before the

That was the case of an insurance on goods, ‘ At and ‘ from Jamaica to London, warranted to depart with con‘ voy, for the voyage, and to sail on or before the first ‘ of August, at a premium of 12 guineas per cent.’—The ship sailed from Jamaica to London on the 31st of July, but without any convoy, whereby the underwriters became discharged from the remaining risk.—An action was brought for a return of premium.—The jury found a verdict

a verdict for the plaintiff subject to the opinion of the court on the above facts; in addition to which, they found 'that it was the constant and invariable usage in insurances, at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to depart with convoy, or, to sail on or before a certain day, to return the premium, deducting one half per cent. if the ship failed without convoy, or after the day prescribed.'

—Upon this case, the court determined that the plaintiff was entitled to recover according to the usage proved.—Lord Mansfield said,—“The law is clear, that if the risk be commenced, there shall be no return of premium. Hence questions arise of distinct risks, insured by one policy. My opinion has been to divide the risks. I am aware that there are great difficulties in the way of apportionments, and therefore the court has always leaned against them. But where an express usage is found by the jury, the difficulty is cured.”—Mr. Justice Buller said;—“The counsel for the defendant did right to make the chief question, whether any evidence of this usage ought to have been received. In mercantile cases, from Lord Holt's time, and in policies of insurance in particular, a great latitude of construction, as to usage, has been admitted. By usage, places come within the policy, which are not within the words: Usage explains, and even controuls the policy. The usage here found by the jury is universal; and though, in some cases, one half per cent. is a small premium for the risk at; yet the underwriters are aware that it is so, and no inconvenience can result from it. In Meyer v. Gregson, no usage was found.”

But if the risk be entire, and be once commenced, it is a general rule that there shall be no return of premium. And the shortness of the time when the thing insured was put in risk affords no ground for a return of any part of the premium; for it becomes the absolute property of the insurer, the moment the risk commences, though it should cease the moment after. This is one of the favourable circumstances which compensate the insurer for the accidents to which he is exposed. It is impossible to apportion the premium to the duration of the risk, which day, but without convoy. There is an usage, that in such cases the premium shall be returned, deducting $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for the risk at.—The insured shall recover the residue of his premium.

But if the risk be entire and be once commenced, there shall be no return.

may be greater in the first hour than in the rest of the voyage (a). Therefore if the ship get under weigh, and sail on the voyage insured, the premium is acquired, though she return the same instant and wholly abandon the voyage. So if the ship deviate from the voyage insured the next hour after she sails; though this discharges the insurers, yet, the risk having been commenced, there shall be no apportionment, or return of any part of the premium, in respect of the diminution of the risk.—Though the voyage be to several different places, and consist of several distinct parts; yet, if in fact it be one entire risk, for one entire premium, and not several distinct risks, there shall be no apportionment, or return of the premium, on account of any contingency which puts an end to the contract, before the commencement of any part of the voyage insured (b).

Berman v. Woodbridge Doug. 751.

A ship is insured "At and from A. to B. during her stay at B. and from thence to her port of discharge at C. and at and from C. back to A." The ship is taken before she arrives at C:—There shall be no return of premium for the voyage from C. to A. this being one entire risk and one voyage.

Thus:—An insurance was made on a French ship and her cargo, 'At and from Honfleur to the coast of Angola, 'during her stay and trade there; at and from thence 'to her port or ports of discharge in St. Domingo; and at 'and from St. Domingo back to Honfleur; at a premium 'of eleven per cent.'—The ship failed to Angola, and from thence, after staying some time there, to the West Indies. On her way from Angola, she put into Cayenne, on the coast of America, and from thence went to Martinico, confessedly out of her course to St. Domingo, where the captain was obliged to dispose of his cargo. The ship failed for Honfleur; but was taken by a privateer on her voyage thither.—As the deviation discharged the underwriters, the only question was, whether there should be a return of part of the premium.—On the part of the plaintiff it was contended, that the voyage insured consisted of three distinct parts or voyages; viz. from Honfleur to Angola, from Angola to St. Domingo, and from St. Domingo back to Honfleur; and that, as this last voyage had never been commenced, the premium ought to be apportioned, and the part of it returned which was paid to insure the risk from St. Domingo to Honfleur.—But the jury, upon that point, were clear that there ought to be no return.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, upon turning the question in his mind, entertained some doubts upon it, and desired that a new trial might be moved for; which being done, the court, upon great consideration, determined that this was one voyage, and one entire risk; and that there could be no return of premium.--- His lordship, in delivering the opinion of the court on this point, said;---“ On the fullest consideration, and after looking into all the cases, (though my opinion has fluctuated), we are now all clear that there ought not to be any any return. The question depends upon this: Whether the policy be upon one entire risk on one voyage, or whether it is to be split into six different risks; for by splitting the words, and taking at and from, separately, it will make six. The principles are clear. When the risk has never begun, there must be a return of premium; and if the voyages in this case are distinct, the voyage from St. Domingo to Honfleur never began. On the other hand, if the risk have once begun, you cannot sever it, and apportion the premium. In an insurance upon a life, with the common exception of suicide and the hands, of justice; if the party commit suicide, or be executed in twenty-four hours, there shall be no return. The case is the same if a voyage insured be once begun. Is this one entire risk? The insured and insurers consider the premium as an entire sum for the whole, without division. It is estimated on the whole at eleven per cent, and, which is extremely material, there is no where any contingency at any period, out or home, mentioned in the policy, which happening, or not happening, is to put an end to the insurance. The argument must be, that if the ship had been taken between Honfleur and Angola, there must have been a return. By an implied warranty, every ship must be sea-worthy when she sails on the voyage insured ; but she is not necessarily to continue so throughout the voyage ; so that, if this be one entire voyage, if the ship was sea-worthy when she left Honfleur, the underwriters would have been liable though she had not been so at Angola, &c. but according to the construction contended for on the part of the plaintiff, she must have been sea-worthy, not only at her departure from Honfleur, but also when she sailed from Angola, and when she sailed from St. Domingo. The cases of Stevens v. Snow (a), and Bond v. Nutt (b), were quite different from this. They depended upon this, that there was a contingency specified in the policy, upon the not happening of which the insurance would cease. In Stevens v. Snow, it depended on the contingency of the ship sailing with convoy from Portsmouth, whether there should be an insurance from that place or not. This necessarily divided the risk and made two voyages. In Bond v. Nutt, it was held that there were two risks upon the same principle, "At Jamaica," was one. The other, viz. "From Jamaica," depended on the contingency of the ship having failed "on or before the first of August." That was a condition precedent to the insurance on the voyage from Jamaica to London. The two cases of Tyrie v. Fletcher, and Loraine v. Thomlinson, are very strong ; for, if you could apportion the premium in any case, it would be in insurances on time."

(a) Vid. Emerig, tom. 1, p. 62, 63. Pothier, h. t. n. 179.

(b) By the ordinance of Louis XIV. h. t. art. 6, if an insurance be made on the outward and homeward voyage, at an entire premium, and the ship arrive at her outward port of destination, but never returns, the insurer shall return one third of the premium.

The premium being entire, is a proof that the risk is entire.

Where the insurance is for a term, and the premium is entire, if the risk be begun, there shall be no return.

Tyrie v. Fletcher,
Cowp. 666.

So, where the insurance is for a term specified in the policy, and for one entire premium ; if the risk be begun, and an event happen immediately after which determines the contract, there shall be no return of premium.

'Thus:—A ship was insured, 'At and from London, 'to any port or place wheresoever or whatsoever, for 'twelve months, from the 19th of August 1776, warranted free from capture or seizure by the Americans.' The premium was 9l. per cent.—The ship was taken by an American privateer, about two months after she sailed.

(a) Sup. 655.—(b) Sup. 353.

—The insured brought an action to recover a proportion of the premium for the residue of the time. The court determined that the risk was entire; and, having been once begun, there could be no return of any part of the premium. Lord Mansfield said,—“ This case is stripped of every authority. There is no case, or practice, in point; and therefore we must argue from general principles applicable to policies of insurance. And I take it, there are two general rules established, applicable to this question. The first is, that where the risk has not been begun, whether this be owing to the fault, pleasure, or will, of the insured, or to any other cause, the premium shall be returned; because a policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity; the underwriter receives a premium for running the risk of indemnifying the insured; and, to whatever cause it be owing, if he do not run the risk, the consideration, for which the premium was put into his hands, fails, and therefore he ought to return it. Another rule is, that if the risk has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards: For though the premium is estimated, and the risk depends upon the nature and length of the voyage; yet, if it was commenced, though it be only for 24 hours or less, the risk is run; the contract is for the entire risk; and no part of the consideration shall be returned; and yet it is as easy to apportion for the length of the voyage, as it is for the time. If a ship had been insured to the East Indies, agreeably to the terms of the policy in this case, and had been taken 24 hours after the risk was begun, by an American captor, there is not a colour to say that there should have been a return of premium. So much, then, is clear; and indeed perfectly agreeable to the ground of determination in Stevenson v. Snow (a). For, in that case, the intention of the parties, the nature of the contract, the consequences of it, spoke manifestly two insurances, and a division between them. The first object of the insurance was from London to Halifax : But if the ship did not depart from Portsmouth with the convoy specified, then there was to be no contract from Portsmouth to Halifax. The parties, then, have said, ‘ We make a contract from London to Halifax ; but, on a certain contingency, it shall only be a contract from London to Portsmouth.’ That contingency not happening, reduces it, in fact, to a contract from London to Portsmouth only. The whole argument turned upon that distinction, and all the judges, in delivering their opinions, lay the stress upon the contract comprising two distinct conditions, and considering the voyage as being, in fact, two voyages : And this was the equitable way of considering it ; for though it was at first consolidated by the parties, there was a defeazance afterwards, though not in words. I think Mr. Justice Wilmut put it particularly on that ground ; but that was the opinion of the court. There was an usage also found by the jury in that case, that it was customary to return a proportionable part of the premium in such cases, but they could not say what part. The court rejected this, as a void usage, for the uncertainty ; but they argue from it, that there being such a custom, plainly shewed the general sense of the merchants, as to the propriety of returning a part of the premium in such cases : And there can be no doubt of the reasonableness of the thing. There has been an instance put where the measure is by time, which seems to me to be very strong, and apposite to the present case ; and that is, an insurance upon a man’s life for twelve months : There can be no doubt but the risk there is constituted by the measure of time, and depends entirely upon it ; for the insured would demand double the premium for two years that he would take to insure the same life for one year only. In such policies there is a general exception against suicide.—If the person put an end to his life the next day, or a month after, or at any other period within the twelve months, there never was an idea that part of the premium should be returned. A case of general practice was put by Mr. Dunning, where the words of the policy are, “ At and from, provided the ship “ fails

(a) Sup. 655.

If a man’s life be insured for 12 months, with an exception of suicide, and he kill himself the next day; there shall be no return.

“fails on or before the first of August (a);” and Mr. Wallace considers, in that case, that the whole policy would depend upon the ship’s failing before the stated day. I do not think so. On the contrary, I think, with Mr. Dunning, that cannot be. A loss in port, before the day appointed for the ship’s departure, can never be coupled with a contingency after the day: But if a question were to arise about it, as at present advised, I should incline to be of opinion, that it would fall within the reasoning of Stevenson v. Snow; and that there were two parts, or contracts, of insurance, with distinct conditions: The first is, ‘I insure the ship in port, against loss before the ‘first of August.’ And, secondly; ‘If she should not be lost ‘in port, I insure her then, during her voyage, from the ‘first of August, till she reach the port specified in the policy.’ The loss in port must happen before the risk upon the voyage could commence; and, vice versa, the risk in port must cease the moment the risk upon the voyage began (b).—Let us see then, what the agreement of the parties is, in the present case. They might have insured from two months to two months; or in any less or greater proportion, if they had thought proper so to do: But the fact is, that they have made no division of time at all; but the contract entered into was one entire contract from the 19th of August 1776, to the 19th of August 1777; which is the same as if it had been expressly said by the insured; ‘If ‘you, the underwriter, will insure me for 12 months, I

If an insurance be ‘at and from,’ provided the ship fails on or before such a day:—Whether this be two risks, or only one entire risk.

(a) It must be owned that the case thus put has much of subtilty in it. One part of it seems repugnant to the other. Mr. Wallace appears to have given it the best answer it would admit of. The word provided makes the failing on or before the first of August a condition upon which the contract is to take effect; and if this be so, the word “at” in the policy is quite nugatory.—(b) This extrajudicial opinion, seems to have been rather hastily delivered, or perhaps, not very accurately reported. See the case of Meyer v. Gregson, sup. 658, which seems to be nearly the case put by Mr. Dunning, and in which Lord Mansfield and the rest of the judges of the King’s Bench decided that there should be no return of premium.

‘ will

‘will give you an entire sum; but I will not have any appointment.’—The ship fails, and the underwriter runs the risk for two months; no part of the premium, then, shall be returned.—I cannot say, if there had been a recapture before the expiration of the 12 months, that the policy would not have revived.”

Even if the premium for a year be computed at so much per month; yet, being a gross sum, it is not a monthly insurance.

In the foregoing case, Lord Mansfield intimated an opinion that where the premium is entire, it is one proof that the risk is meant to be entire. In the following case, the court of King's Bench carried this idea still farther, and decided that if, upon an insurance for a year, a gross premium be given; but it is expressed in the policy to be at so much per cent. per month; this shall be deemed only a mode of computing the gross sum, and does not make the contract a monthly insurance.

Loraine v. Tamlinson, Doug.
564.

A ship insured against capture for 12 months, is lost in a storm within two months. The premium is 9 per cent. and expressed in the policy to be at the rate of 15s. per month; yet there shall be no return.

An insurance was made on a ship against capture only, for twelve months, in the coasting trade. The plaintiff underwrote 200l. In the body of the policy it was stated, ‘That the insurers confessed themselves paid the consideration due to them by the insured, at and after the rate of 15s. per cent. per month.’ At the bottom opposite the plaintiff’s subscription, was written, ‘Premium received the 15th of March 1779; and on the back was indorsed, —Newcastle 15th March 1779, Mr. J. G. Thomlinson, on his ship Chollerford, himself master, for twelve months, in the coasting trade, at and between Leith and the Isle of Wight, beginning the 13th of March 1779, and ending the 12th of March 1780.’—The premium was, in fact, not paid, it being the usage in Newcastle not to pay the premiums at the time of making insurances, but at certain times afterwards.—The ship was lost in a storm within the first two months; and the insured tendered the underwriter 3l. as the premium for two months.—The underwriter brought his action against the insured to recover the whole premium of 18l. The defendant pleaded the tender, and paid the 3l. into court.—The court were clearly of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole premium.—Lord Mansfield said,—“This is a mere question of construction, on the face of the instrument, and therefore, parol evidence ought not to have have been admitted to explain it. It is an insurance for 12 months, for one gross sum of 181. They have calculated this sum to be at the rate of 15s. per month. But what was to be paid down? Not 15s. for the first month, and so from month to month; but 181. at once. Two cases have been mentioned. Stevenson v. Snow (a), was decided on the ground of there being two voyages. Tyrie v. Fletcher (b) is directly in point against the defendant." He then repeated the two rules laid down by himself in this last case.

SECT. III.

Upon the Performance of some Stipulation.

IT is frequently agreed between the parties that, upon the happening of a certain event, or the performance of some stipulation, the insured shall return a part of the premium; and clauses to this effect are then inserted in the policy. If, in such case, the event do happen, or the thing stipulated be performed, the insured shall be entitled to the return of premium agreed upon.

Where part is to be returned on the performance of some stipulation, this shall be returned though the insurer be obliged to pay a partial loss.

In time of war it is frequently stipulated that a part of the premium shall be returned, "if the ship sail with convoy and arrive." And upon the construction of this clause, several important questions have arisen.

If the stipulation be for a mere sailing with convoy, without specifying to any particular place, a sailing with convoy from one port to another in the same country, for the purpose of there joining convoy for the voyage, will be a sailing with convoy within the meaning of the stipulation.

Thus:—The ship Ceres was insured, 'At and from Oporto to Lynn, with liberty to touch and stay at any ports or places on the coast of Portugal, to join convoy, particularly at Lisbon; at 12 guineas per cent., to return

Audley v. Duff,
2 Bos. & Pal.
111.

A ship is insured at 12 guineas p. r cent. to return 61. if she sail with convoy from the coast of Portugal, and arrive. She sails under convoy from Oporto to Lisbon, the general rendezvous, in order to sail from thence with the whole fleet. The ships, in their passage from Oporto to Lisbon, being dispersed, the ship insured runs for England and arrives:—This is a sailing with convoy, so as to entitle the insured to the stipulated return.

(a) Sup. 655.—(b) Sup. 662.

‘ 6l. if she sailed with convoy from the coast of Portugal and arrived.’—In an action to recover this 6l. per cent. of the premium, it appeared that, at the time the Ceres was to sail, there were many merchant ships collected in the different ports of Portugal, and Lord St. Vincent, the commander of that station, being unable to afford separate convoys for England, from each port in Portugal, sent a cutter and a sloop to fetch the trade from Oporto to Lisbon, where they were to lie in the bay of Doyras, without entering the port of Lisbon, to avoid the Lisbon duties. From that place a convoy was appointed for the whole trade to England. The Oporto fleet in proceeding to Lisbon, being dispersed, lost the convoy, and the Ceres, then judging it for the best, ran for England, and arrived.—It was contended on the part of the defendant, that the Ceres never left the coast of Portugal with convoy.—Lord Eldon, who tried the cause, told the jury that, as the Oporto trade had put themselves under the convoy of the cutter and sloop which formed a part of the aggregate convoy for England, they had deprived themselves of all power of acting for themselves, and had therefore departed with convoy from the coast of Portugal. He added, that the liberty given by the policy to touch at other ports on the coast of Portugal, did not vary the inference of her being under convoy for England from the moment she received sailing instructions; and from that time the liberty so given was at an end. The jury, under this direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff.—Upon a motion to set this verdict aside, and enter a nonsuit, the court were clearly of opinion that the event had happened on which the plaintiff’s title to a return of premium was to attach, and therefore that the verdict was right.—Lord Eldon said,—“ It being unknown in England from what port or coast of Portugal the convoy would sail, the clause for a return of premium was to be adapted to the circumstances of the case. The departure with convoy might be from Oporto, or it might be from some other place. It became necessary, therefore, to introduce some expression, which extended to something more than a mere departure from Oporto. The fair interpretation of the agreement is, that the insured shall have the benefit of of the policy, though the ship should fail from Oporto without convoy; but that if she failed from Oporto, which is on the coast of Portugal, with convoy, then there should be a return of premium."

Upon the effect of the word "arrives," several cases have been determined. In the first of these, it was holden that this word relates to the arrival of the ship, and not to the arrival of the goods on board, even where the insurance is on the goods only.

Thus:—An insurance was made,—‘At and from any port or ports in Grenada to London, at 18 guineas per cent. to return 8l. per cent. if fails from any of the West India islands, with convoy for the voyage, and arrives.’ At the bottom of the policy there was written a declaration that it was on sugars, valued at 20l. per hoghead. The ship failed with convoy within the time limited, having 51 hogheads of sugars on board. She arrived safe in the Downs, where the convoy left her as usual. She afterwards struck on a sand bank near Margate, and 11 of the 51 casks of sugar were washed overboard, and the rest damaged. The ship was afterwards got off, and arrived safe in the port of London. The sugars saved were carried to London in other vessels, and the 40 hogheads being sold, produced 340l. instead of 800l. their valuation in the policy. An action was brought against the underwriters for a return of premium.—The defendant paid into court 8l. per cent. on 340l. The plaintiffs insisted that they were entitled to have 8l. per cent. returned on the valued price of the whole 51 hogheads.—At the trial, before Lord Mansfield, the plaintiffs had a verdict for their whole demand.—Upon a motion for a new trial, the principal question was upon the effect of the word "arrives."—For the plaintiff it was insisted that this word related only to the arrival of the ship; that, in policies of this sort, the intention is, that the underwriters shall take the war risk upon themselves; but that, if the vessel be protected by convoy from that risk, and actually arrive, they shall then return as much of the premium as was necessary to cover it.—On the other side, it was contended that, as the words of the policy must be applied to the subject matter of the insurance,

The word arrives relates only to the ship, even in a policy on goods.

Simond v. Baydell, Doug. 255.

Goods are insured from Grenada to London, at 18 guineas per cent. "to return 8l. per cent. if "fails with convoy and "arrives."—The arrival of the ship is what is meant, and the ship having failed with convoy, the insured is entitled to a return of 8l. per cent. on the sum insured, notwithstanding any partial loss on the goods.

rance, which in this case was on the goods, not on the ship, the return of premium could, at most, be only on the value of the sugars which actually came to London; whereas, if the defendant must pay the valued amount of the sugars lost, and the difference between the valued price and the actual produce of the sugars saved, and also return 8l. per cent. upon the whole, the insured would be considerable gainers by the loss.—The court determined that the arrival of the ship was what was meant by the policy; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a return of full 8l. per cent. on the sum insured, notwithstanding the partial loss on the goods.—Lord Mansfield, after observing how very inattentive those who introduce additional clauses into policies are to their import, said,—“I do not doubt, however, how we are to construe this policy. Dangers of the sea are the same in peace and war: But war introduces hazards of another sort, depending on a variety of circumstances; some known, others not, for which an additional premium must be paid. Those hazards are diminished by the protection of convoy; and if the insured will warrant a departure with convoy, there is a diminution of the additional premium. If the insured will not warrant a departure with convoy, he pays the full premium; and in that case, the underwriter says: “If it turn out that the ship do depart with convoy, “I will return part of the premium.” But a ship may fail with convoy, and be separated from it by a storm, or other accident, in a day or two, and lose its protection. On a warranty to fail with convoy, that would not be a breach of the condition: But, to guard against that, the insured adds, in policies of the present sort; “The ship must not only fail with convoy, but she must arrive “to entitle you to the return.” The words, “and arrives” do not mean that the ship shall arrive in the company of the convoy; but only that she herself shall arrive. If she do, that shews, either that she had convoy the whole way, or did not want it. But, in the stipulation for the return of premium, no regard is had by the parties to the condition of the goods, on the arrival of the ship. The construction contended for by the defendant is adding a comment longer than the text. If it had been

How the stipulation that a part of the premium shall be returned, if the ship fail with convoy, must be understood.

The words “and arrives” refer to the ship, not to the goods insured.

been meant that no return should be made unless all the "goods arrive safe, they would have said; "If the ship arrive "with all the goods; or, safely with all the goods." The total or partial loss of the goods was the subject of the indemnity, and must be paid for by the underwriter. But as to the return of the additional premium; whether the goods arrive safe or not, makes no part of the question. The single principle which governs is, that, in the events that have happened, the war risk has been rated too high."

So, where the freight of the ship Jackson was insured, 'At and from Jamaica to London, warranted to sail on or before the 26th of July 1796, with convoy for the voyage, at a premium of 10 guineas per cent. to return 21. per cent. if she sailed on or before the 1st of July 1796, and arrived.'—Afterwards, by a memorandum indorsed on the policy, on the 15th of August 1796, and signed by the underwriters, it was agreed, in consideration of 10 guineas per cent. additional premium, that the warranty of sailing with convoy should be annulled, and the defendant undertook to return 10l. per cent. "if the ship sailed with convoy and arrived." The ship sailed from Jamaica on the 26th of July, with convoy, but separated in bad weather, and was captured on the 26th of October, recaptured on the 5th of November, and carried into Cork, where she was delivered up to the owners, on paying 9l. 14s. 7d. per cent. for salvage. She afterwards arrived at the port of London with her cargo. In an action on the policy, with a count for a return of premium, the defendant paid into court 19l. 9s. 2d. the amount of the salvage on 200l. his subscription.—The plaintiffs obtained a verdict for the premium, and, upon a motion to set it aside, the court determined that, according to the true construction of the memorandum, the insured was entitled to the return of premium there stipulated.—Lord Kenyon said,—“I agree with the defendant's counsel, that every arrival of the ship at her port of destination, would not be an arrival within the fair construction of the memorandum; such, for instance, as an arrival in the possession of an enemy at a neutral port; or an arrival at her port in England, as the property

Aguilar and others v. Rodgers, 7 T. R. 421.

The insurer on freight agrees to return part of the premium, "if the ship sail with convoy and arrive."—The ship having sailed with convoy and arrived, the insured shall have the return, though the ship being captured and recaptured, the underwriters were obliged to pay salvage.

perty of other persons after a capture. But, in order to satisfy the memorandum, it should be an arrival at the destined port, in the course of the voyage; and, in this case, the ship did arrive at the port of London, in the course of her voyage. It is now too late to controvert the authority of Hamilton v. Mendez (a), even if we were disposed so to do, which I am not, where it was holden that though the insured may abandon on hearing of a capture, yet if they do not abandon, and the ship be afterwards recaptured, it must be considered as if she had never been out of the possession of the owners. It is 18 years since the case of Simond v. Boydell (b) was decided. That case must be well known in the commercial world; and if the parties in this case had intended to make an agreement different from that which the words used in this memorandum import, they would have added, after "arrived," the words "safely from the enemy" or some others to that effect. But the words here used are not equivocal, and we ought not to depart from them. It would be attended with great mischief and inconvenience if, in construing contracts of this kind, we were not to decide according to the words used by the contracting parties. On the grammatical construction of the words, which is the safest rule to go by, I am of opinion that the verdict ought not to be set aside."

So, if the ship sail with convoy and arrive, this will entitle the insured to the stipulated return of premium, though the goods insured be afterwards lost, and the underwriters be obliged to pay a total loss.

Hibernia v. Harcourt, before Sir J. Mansfield, C. J. at G. H. 26th February 1806.

The ship sailed with convoy and arrives, but the goods insured are afterwards totally lost:—The insured is entitled to a return of premium, as well as to a total loss.

Thus: Goods were insured on board the Marquis of Lansdown from London to Dominica, at a premium of 8 guineas per cent. to return 4l. per cent. "if sails with convoy and arrives."—The ship sailed with convoy, and arrived on the 6th of February 1805, at the port of Roseau in Dominica, and began unloading, and continued till the 22d of February, when a French fleet arrived, and, amongst others, captured the Marquis of Lansdown, with the goods insured on board.—In an action on the policy, the plaintiff claimed not only a total loss by the capture; but also 4l. per cent. return of premium, the ship having sailed with convoy and arrived.—Sir James Mansfield, C. J. who tried the cause, was at first of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to any return of premium; but the above case of Simond v. Boydell (a) being cited, he yielded to the authority of it, and directed the jury to give the plaintiff the 4l. per cent. return of premium, together with the total loss.

(a) Sup. 572.—(b) Sup. 671.

If it be agreed to return different portions of the premium in case the ship sail with convoy for different portions of the voyage, and arrive; this means an arrival at the ship's ultimate port of destination.

As where a ship was insured 'At and from Lisbon to Cadiz, and at and from thence to Flushing, at a premium of 20 guineas per cent. to return 8l. per cent. if the ship sailed from Cadiz with convoy for England; and 2l. per cent. more for convoy from England to Flushing; or 10l. per cent. if with convoy for the voyage, and arrives.'—The ship having sailed from Lisbon to Cadiz, sailed from thence under convoy for England and arrived; but was there seized and taken as prize. In an action upon the policy, one question was, whether the insured was entitled to a return of 8l. per cent. the ship having sailed with convoy from Cadiz to England, and arrived there?—Upon this question the court determined that no return of premium was demandable within the meaning of the policy, the ship never having arrived at Flushing, her ultimate port of destination.—The reason given for this decision was, that the words "and arrives" annex a condition which over-rides and governs equally all the several stipulations for a return of premium, in the events of a sailing with convoy for the different parts and subdivisions of the voyage; and that, as the whole 10l. per cent. is made returnable upon a sailing with convoy for each part of the voyage, and arriving at Flushing, there could be no reason why the 8l. and the 2l. per cent. should be made respectively returnable on account of the mere sailing with convoy for the

The words "and arrives" mean an arrival at the ship's ultimate destination.

Kelner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East 396.

Policy on a ship from Lisbon to Cadiz, and from thence to Flushing, at 20 guineas per cent. to return 8l. for convoy from Cadiz to England, and 2l. more for convoy from England to Flushing, and arrives.—The ship arrives under convoy in England, where she is captured.—The insured is not entitled to a return of 8l. per cent. the ship never having arrived at Flushing.

(a) Sup. 671.

pective parts of the voyage, independently of the same event of ultimate arrival; and especially when the underwriter could derive no benefit from such partial convoy, but would have a total loss to pay.

If, before the ship can fail with convoy, the underwriters be discharged, the insured shall be entitled to a return for convoy.

If it be stipulated that there shall be a return of part of the premium for failing with convoy and arrival, and, in consequence of the breach of some warranty, or the non-performance of some stipulation, or of a deviation, the underwriters be discharged before the ship can fail with convoy, the insured shall be entitled to the stipulated return of premium; because the discharge of the underwriters is, to them, equivalent to a failing with convoy and arrival.—As where a ship was insured at and from Jamaica to Liverpool, warranted to sail on or before the first of August, at a premium of 20 guineas per cent. to return 8*l.* per cent. if she failed with convoy. The ship did not fail till September, and in an action for a return of premium, it was admitted that the insured was entitled to a return of 8*l.* per cent. for convoy (a).

Sect. IV.

Of the Deduction of one-half per Cent. upon a Return of Premium.

AS the insurer can never, by his own act, discharge himself from the contract, it seems but reasonable that, where the insured thinks proper to put a stop to the adventure, and prevent the risk from ever commencing, he should make some compensation to the insurer for his trouble and disappointment; it is therefore the general custom in all the maritime countries of Europe, to allow him to retain one-half per cent. (b).—This the French denominate droit de signature. Pothier (c) thinks it is given to compensate the insurer for the loss he sustains by the non-performance of the contract on the part of the insured: Emerigon (a) says, it is for his trouble in signing the policy, and making the proper entry in his books; and this is the reason given in Le Guidon (b).

(a) Meyer v. Gregson, sup. 658.—(b) Molloy, b. 2 c. 7, § 12.—(c) h. t. n. 181.

It is allowed to the insurer where the contract is void for some radical defect, provided this were unknown to him when he entered into the contract (c). But if he were informed of the fault, or must have known it, before he subscribed the policy; as if he were to insure a ship or goods, when he knew of their safe arrival, or seamen's wages, or contraband goods, knowing them to be such, he could have no claim to this allowance (d).

Pothier holds that if the contract become void, not by the act of the insured, but by some cause which he could not prevent or control, the insurer shall not be entitled to the half per cent (e).—Emerigon, on the contrary, maintains that in all cases where the policy becomes void, without any fraud on the part of the insurer, he shall have this allowance (f).

(a) Tom. 2, p. 168.—(b) Ch 2, art. 16.—(c) Ord. of Antwerp, art. 14, 2 Mag. 27.—(d) Valin on art. 10, 16, 17, h. t. Pothier, h. t. n. 183, Emerig. tom. 2, p. 169.—(e) Pothier, h. t. n. 181.—(f) Emerig. tom. 2, p. 169. Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 2, art. 16, ord. of Amst. art. 22. ord. of Antwerp art. 16. 2 Mag. 27, 28.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Proceedings in Actions on Policies of Insurance.

IN treating of actions on policies of insurance we will inquire,

- I. In what courts they may be brought ;
- II. Of the declaration ;
- III. Of the plea, and bringing money into-court ;
- IV. Of the consolidation rule ;
- V. Of the trial ;
- VI. Of the recovery back of losses, improperly demanded.

SECT. I.

In what Courts Actions on Policies of Insurance may be brought.

The courts of common law have the sole jurisdiction in matters of insurance.

Insurance being a marine contract, the law which regulates it, is considered in most of the commercial states of Europe, as a branch of marine law, and therefore, where no commercial tribunal is established, questions arising upon this contract, generally belong to the jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty (a). In Scotland this is, in the first instance, a subject of admiralty jurisdiction. But I do not find that in England courts of admiralty have ever had jurisdictions in questions of insurance (b). In a former part of this work (c) I took occasion to observe, that although the modes of administering justice in our courts of common law, are so well suited to the investigation and decision of all commercial questions; yet, that it was not till towards the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, that actions upon policies of insurance began to be brought in the courts of Westminster; and that the legislature, even then, conceiving that questions upon this contract ought not to be litigated in those courts, being governed by certain rules unknown to the common law, erected a court for the sole purpose of determining such causes; but that, though the powers of this court were greatly enlarged in a subsequent reign, yet it soon fell into disuse, and the determination of all questions arising out of this contract has long since exclusively belonged to the courts of common law.

(a) Vid. Emerig. t. 2, p. 319 ——— (b) For this consult Zouch on the jurisdiction of the admiralty. — (c) Sup. 24. tions

Courts of equity have no more jurisdiction in cases of insurance than in those of the purest common law cognizance. They do, indeed, sometimes, in cases of insurance, as in all other cases, interpose their authority for the advancement of justice. They will compel a trustee to permit his name to be used by the cestui que trust in an action on a policy of insurance (a); they will issue commissions for the examination of witnesses residing abroad, or out of the jurisdiction of the court, and grant injunctions to stay the proceedings at law till the return of such commissions (b); they will compel a party charged with fraud to make a full discovery upon oath of all circumstances, within his knowledge, which may lead to a discovery of the real facts of the case; and deliver up, or permit an inspection of, all papers and documents which are material to the matters in dispute. But, except in such cases, it has been solemnly determined, that courts of equity have no jurisdiction in questions of insurance (c).

Courts of equity have no jurisdiction in such cases,

It may be proper, in this place, to mention, that the authority of the supreme courts of Westminster is so transcendant, that nothing but the express words of an act of parliament can take away or abridge their jurisdiction

The parties cannot, by agreeing to submit their differences to arbitration, oust the supreme courts of the jurisdiction.

(a) Per Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 457.—(b) R. Chitty v. Selwin, 2 Atk. 359.—(c) R. upon demurrer in Chancery, and confirmed in the House of Lords upon appeal, De Ghetoff v. Lond. Assur. 3 Bro. Parl. Ca. 525; Per Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 457.

in any case (a); and therefore a clause inserted in a policy, that, in case of any dispute between the parties, it shall be referred to arbitration, is merely nugatory; for, without it, the parties may, if they think proper, submit their differences to arbitration; and with it, neither can compel the other to do so; for the agreement of the parties cannot oust the supreme courts of their jurisdiction (b). If indeed, an award be actually made, it will be a bar to an action; or if the parties have submitted their differences to arbitration, and the reference be still depending, that, perhaps, may also be a bar (c).

SECT. II.

Of the Declaration.

Special assumpsit is the proper form of action against private underwriters.

THE common policy of insurance, subscribed by private underwriters, being only a written undertaking, not under seal, is but a simple contract, and therefore, assumpsit is the proper form of action to be brought upon it, against the underwriters. And as the action in such case is founded on a particular and express undertaking, made upon a consideration upon which the law would not, by necessary implication, raise the promise specified in the policy, the plaintiff must declare specially upon it.

Heads of the declaration.

In this, like every other case of special assumpsit, the contract must be set forth with precision; for any material variance or omission will be fatal (d).—The declaration must therefore recite the policy, which is alleged to have been made according to the custom of

(a) 2 Hawk. P. C. 286, 2 Bur. 1042. — (b) R. Kill v. Hollister, 1 Wils. 129. The same principle prevails in the French courts. There the judges will permit questions of fact or of usage to be referred to merchants; but they will never suffer any question of law to be submitted to the decision of such persons. Pothier, h. t. n. 201. — (c) Per Cur. 1 Wils. 129, sed Q. — (d) Vid. Gilb. law of evid. 193.

merchants,)

merchants), with such warranties and stipulations as may have been introduced into it, with an averment that the defendant had notice of the policy.—It then alleges, that in consideration that the plaintiff had paid his premium to the defendant, and had promised to perform all things on his part to be done, the defendant promised to become an insurer for the sum subscribed by him, upon the terms mentioned in the policy, and that he would perform all things, on his part, as to that sum; and also that he had subscribed the policy as an insurer for that sum. That the insured was, at the time of the insurance, and at the time of the loss, interested in the ship or goods insured, to the amount of the value in the policy, if it be a valued one, or to the amount of the sums subscribed, if it be an open one.—It then states that the ship, &c. on a certain day was in good safety at her port of departure; that she sailed on the voyage insured within the time mentioned in the policy, if a time be limited for her sailing; and with convoy, if there be a warranty for her so doing;—and it likewise avers an exact compliance with every other warranty expressed in the policy.—The loss is then stated, which must appear to have been occasioned by some of the perils insured against; and this must be shewn with reasonable certainty, that the insurer may have notice of the case against which he is to prepare his defence.—Notice to the defendant of this loss, and a demand of the sum subscribed by him are then averred:—And lastly, the breach of the contract by the non-payment of the sum subscribed by the defendant.

This is the general outline of a declaration upon a common policy, subscribed by individual underwriters in an ordinary case. When there are any particular circumstances, it behoves the plaintiff to be careful to adapt his declaration to them.—It is usual to add a count for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use, to enable the plaintiff to recover back his premium; if, under all the circumstances, he should appear to be entitled only to that, or a part of it.

Count for money had and received.

It is not necessary to declare specially upon an adjustment.

The insured may give it in evidence upon the usual declaration upon the policy,

When a loss has been adjusted, and the adjustment signed by the insurer in the usual manner, the insured, in order to recover this loss, is not obliged to declare specially upon the adjustment as upon a new contract; but may declare upon the policy in the usual manner, and give the adjustment in evidence, which, as we formerly observed (a), is equivalent to an admission, though not conclusive, of all the facts necessary to be proved, to entitle the insured to recover upon the policy (b).

The averment of interest may be either general or special.

The averment of interest in the insured may be either general or special. Under a general averment of interest the plaintiff may give in evidence any interest he may have in the thing insured. But if the interest be averred specially, it must be proved as stated. The general averment is, therefore, in most cases, to be preferred. Nor can I see any necessity for a special averment, unless the question of interest be the only matter in dispute between the parties, and the plaintiff mean to put this upon the record, in order to save the expense of a trial (c).

But the general averment is sufficient not only as to the title, but also as to the quantum of interest.

The general averment is sufficient, not only as to the title or claim of the insured, but also as to the quantum of interest. In assumpsit the plaintiff recovers damages according to the evidence, pro tanto; and, therefore, if he aver interest generally, in the entire thing insured, he shall recover for the loss in proportion to the quantum of interest he proves (d).

The declaration need not state the species of goods put on board the ship.

If in the policy the insurance be declared to be on a particular species of goods, it is sufficient in alleging the loading these goods on board, to state "that divers goods, wares, and merchandizes of such a value were loaded on board," &c. without specifying the particular goods (a).

(a) Sup. ch. 14, § 3.—(b) Per Lord Kenyon, at N. P. Rodgers v. Maylor, sup. 634.—(c) See the case of Crawford v. Hunter, sup. 85, where the interest was specially averred, probably to bring the question of interest, which, in that case, was a mere question of law, to an immediate decision upon demurrer.—(d) R. Rising v. Burnett, inf.

If the insurance be made in the name of an agent, the action may be brought either in his name or in the name of the principal; and in either case it must be averred that the policy was made in the name of the agent, as agent, for the use of the principal, who is averred to have been interested in the ship or goods insured, to the amount of the sum insured, or the value in the policy.

If the insurance be in the name of an agent, it must be averred for whose use.

In averring interest in the insured, it is sufficient to shew it to have been in those who had the property at the time of making the policy.—Therefore, where it was averred in the declaration, that P. Maingy and N. Maingy, until, and at the time of making the policy, and also at the time of the loss, were interested in the goods mentioned in the policy; and that the said insurance was made for the said P. M., and N. M., and for their account.—In the course of the cause it appeared that a Mr. Le Mesurier had, since the policy was effected, become a partner with P. M. and N. M., and had taken a share of all the stock, including the goods insured. Upon this it was urged on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiff should be nonsuited; for as Mr. Le M. was interested in the goods insured, the averment of interest in the declaration was disproved.—But Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, being of opinion that as Mr. Le M. was not interested at the time of making the policy, to which the averment of interest related, the plaintiff had brought the action properly for those only who were interested at that time (b).

Peirhard v. Whitmore, at N. P. after Mich. 1786, 2 Bof. & Pul. 155. n.

In averring the interest, it is sufficient to shew it to have been in those who had the property at the time of making the insurance.

In this case it seems to have been taken for granted, that if Mr. Le M. had been a part owner at the time the policy was effected, the plaintiff must have been nonsuited. Yet the following case shews that, even in

(a) R. on special demurrer; De Symons v. Johnston, 2 New Rep. 77. —(b) And yet, the usual form of the averment alleges that the insured was interested not only at the time when the insurance was effected, but also at the time of the loss.

that that case, the averment would be sufficiently supported by the evidence.

Page v. Fry,
2 Bof. and Pul.
240.—3 Esp.
Rep. 185.

A cargo is purchased by A. who parts with a share in it to B., and afterwards insures it on his own account; A. may aver interest in himself alone. The fact of B.'s having been let into a share in the adventure, does not negative the averment, A. having still an interest in the entirety of the cargo.

A policy was effected on a cargo of corn by the plaintiff, as agent to Hyde and Hobbs.—In the declaration on this policy, it was averred that Hyde and Hobbs were, 'at the time of loading the said corn on board the said ship, and at the time of subscribing the policy, and also at the time of the loss,' interested in the said corn, to the amount of all the money insured thereon, and that the said policy so made in the name of the plaintiff, was made for the use, risk, benefit, and account of the said Hyde and Hobbs.—Upon the trial before Lord Eldon, it appeared that after Hyde and Hobbs had purchased the corn on their own account, they, thinking the engagement might be too large for them, offered another house a share in the corn, which was accepted; Hyde and Hobbs having informed the plaintiff of this, directed him to effect the insurance on the cargo. Hyde and Hobbs paid for the cargo, and invoices were made out to them.—It was objected, on the part of the defendant, that this evidence negatived the averment in the declaration, that the whole interest was in Hyde and Hobbs.—Lord Eldon, however, directed a verdict for the plaintiff, with liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit.—Upon that motion, the court were clearly of opinion that Hyde and Hobbs had an interest in the entirety of the cargo, sufficient to support the averment in the declaration, notwithstanding other persons had a beneficial interest in part.

Whether it be necessary to aver interest in a case not prohibited by the 19 G. 2. c. 37.

It has been holden (a) that before the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, insurances without interest were not illegal; and that, before that act, it was unnecessary to aver interest in the insured in any case whatever; and consequently that, since that act, it is unnecessary to aver interest in any case not prohibited by it.

Craufurd v. Hunter, 8 T. R. 13, sup. 109.

Commissioners for the care of foreign ships and Therefore, where commissioners, appointed under the stat. 35 G. III. c. 8. § 21. were authorized to take into their possession and care all Dutch ships and effects brought into or detained in the ports of Great Britain, and to dispose thereof according to such directions as they might receive from the privy council, it was determined that these commissioners might insure, in their own names, the ships and effects thus put under their care, while they were on their passage to this country; and that a count stating the nature of their trust, and averring an interest in them, as such commissioners, was good.—In the same case it was also determined, that a count averring that the ships insured did not, at the time when the insurance was effected, belong to his Majesty or any of his Subjects, was likewise good, without any averment of interest (a).

(a) Vid. sup. 109.

goods seized by the King, may insure in their own names, and declare on their own interest.

(a) The question in the above case of Craufurd v. Hunter was, in another action on the same policy, brought by writ of error into the Exchequer Chamber, where, after several arguments, the judgment of the King's Bench was affirmed, vid. Lucena v. Craufurd, 3 Bos. and Pul. 75, where the arguments of counsel, and of the judges are fully reported.—The cause was afterwards removed, by writ of error, to the House of Lords, where a number of questions were propounded to the judges, who, differing upon several of them, delivered their opinions seriatim. Lord Eldon, who dissented from the judgment of the King's Bench and Exchequer Chamber, took a most masterly and comprehensive view of the whole subject, and maintained his opinion by arguments which will, I am persuaded, have the effect of restoring the doctrine of insurable interest to its original and genuine principles, which, on some occasions, seem to have been lost sight of. The result was, that a venire de novo was awarded, the cause was again tried before Lord Ellenborough, when a verdict was found for the plaintiffs upon the second count of the declaration, which averred the interest to be in the King.—A bill of exceptions was tendered, which if persevered in will bring the case once more before the Exchequer Chamber.—See a very full report of the arguments in the House of Lords, 2 New Rep. 269. which, unfortunately, was not published till after the fourth chapter of this impression on insurable interest had been worked off.

This

This point has since, in the following case, been brought to a solemn decision.

Nantes v. Thompson, 2 East 385. sup 41.

A declaration on a policy on a foreign ship need not aver any interest in the insured, though the words "interest or no interest" be not in the policy.

An insurance was made, in the usual form, on the ship Hoop, valued at £1400, and goods on board, at and from Elseineur to Ferrol, Cadix, and Carthagena, warranted to depart with convoy for the voyage. The declaration averred, that the plaintiff gave the order to the agent employed to effect the policy, 'that the said ship was not, at the time of effecting the policy, or at any other time, the property of his Majesty or any of his subjects.' It then stated, that the ship, in the course of her voyage, arrived and anchored in Plymouth Sound, and was there arrested and detained by order of his Majesty, and afterwards condemned as lawful prize; whereby she became wholly lost to the plaintiff, and to every other person to whom the same did or might appertain. To this there was a demurrer, assigning for causes, that it was not alleged for whose use, or on whose account, the policy was made, nor to whom the ship belonged; nor what person or persons were interested in the said insurance; nor that the plaintiff, or any other person, had any interest or property in the ship.—In the argument it was contended, on the part of the defendant, that though it is competent to a foreigner, notwithstanding the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, to lay a wager on the event of a ship's safe arrival, without any interest in the property; yet, that a policy, in the terms and principle of it, unless otherwise expressed, imported a contract of indemnity, and therefore necessarily supposed an interest in the party for whose benefit it was made. That if that were the understanding of the parties, such interest ought to be averred, otherwise it would be a deception upon the underwriter, who would, of course, demand a higher premium, because, upon a mere wager policy, every loss must be total; for in such case there could be no abandonment or benefit of salvage. And, moreover, that the insured in such case has no interest in the preservation of the ship, or her ability to perform the voyage, but is rather interested in insuring the most desperate risks; against which the underwriter ought to have due warning, by the usual words, "interest or no interest." interest.”—But the court, on the authority of the above mentioned case of Craufurd v. Hunter, determined that, though these words were not in the policy, the declaration need not aver interest in the insured (a).

If a policy be made in the names of two persons, one of them may bring an action on it alone, and aver the sole interest in himself; and proof of this will entitle him to recover (b).

One of several insureds may alone sue, and aver a sole interest in himself.

With respect to the avertment of the loss.—As this fact is often the principal matter in dispute, it is necessary to state the true cause of it with reasonable certainty, that it may appear to have been a loss within the policy, and for which the defendant is liable; and also, that he may have notice of the case which he is called upon to answer.—Therefore, if a ship be destroyed by the worms which infest the rivers in hot climates, the insured cannot declare upon a loss by the perils of the sea (c). So, if a number of slaves perish for want of sufficient and proper food, occasioned by extraordinary delay in the voyage, arising from tempestuous weather; the insured cannot declare on this as a loss by the perils of the sea (d). So, if a ship be driven by stress of weather on an enemy's coast, and she be there captured, though not materially damaged; this must be averred as a loss by capture, and not by the perils of the sea (e).

The loss must be averred to have arisen from the true cause, and no other.

So, if part of the ship's crew be taken away from their employment, at a critical moment, by an irresistible force, and in consequence the ship drive on shore, the injury, thus occasioned, is a loss by the perils of the sea, and must be so averred in the declaration (f).

If, in a declaration upon a policy without interest, the loss be averred to have been occasioned by capture,

(a) Vid. 4 East 400. Kellner v. Le Mesurier.—(b) Per Le Blanc J. at N. P. Marsh v. Robinson, 4 Esp. Rep. 98.—(c) R. Rhol v. Parr, 1 Esp. Rep. 444, sup. 492.—(d) R. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656, sup. 491.—(e) Per Lord Kenyon at N. P. Green v. Elmslie, Peake Rep. 212.—(f) R. Hodgson v. Malcolm, 2 New Rep. 336, sup. 490:

when, in fact, the ship was released from the capture, and might have proceeded on her voyage; the insured cannot recover; for the ship might have reached her destined port, which was the event insured.—Had it been a policy upon interest, the insured might have abandoned, and then the averment of a loss by capture would have been good.

Kul'n Kemp v. Figue, 1 T. R. 304, sup. 130.

A ship insured, interest or no interest, is captured, but afterwards set at liberty in a condition to pursue the voyage insured; but instead of that, sails on a different voyage, and is lost:—The insured cannot recover as for a loss by capture.

Therefore, where goods were insured on board the ship Emanuel, at and from Falmouth to Marseilles, interest or no interest, warranted a Danish ship.—In declaring on this policy it was averred, that ‘Whilst the ship was proceeding in her voyage from Falmouth to Marseilles, and before she could arrive at Marseilles, she was captured by the Spaniards; and thereby the said ship, and also the goods and merchandizes on board her, were totally lost to the plaintiffs.’—Upon the trial it appeared, that the ship was taken by a Spanish privateer, and carried into Ceuta, where she was condemned, but, upon appeal, was afterwards released, and in a condition to pursue her voyage; but instead of proceeding to Marseilles, which she might have done, she first sailed to Malaga to refit, and from thence she went on a voyage to Bremen, and in that voyage was lost.—It was objected, on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiffs could not recover upon this form of declaring, for a loss by capture; for though the vessel was captured, yet having afterwards been restored, she might have reached her destined port, in which case the underwriters would have been discharged by the terms of the memorandum; that if this had been a policy upon interest, the averment that the ship was lost by capture would have been good; because, in that case, the insured might have abandoned: But this being a wager policy, and the event insured against being the non-arrival of the ship at Marseilles, the insured could not abandon (a).—Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, being of this opinion, nonsuited the plaintiffs.—Upon a motion to set aside this nonfuit, it was contended, on the part of the plaintiffs, that the object of the voyage was defeated by the capture; that the moment the voyage was defeated, the insurers became liable, and after that, it was immaterial what course the ship took.—But the court adopted the same opinion upon which Mr. Justice Buller had nonsuited the plaintiffs, and held that this could not be averred to be a loss by capture; because, after the capture, the ship might still have proceeded to Marseilles, which was the event insured.

(a) Vid. Fitzgerald v. Pole, 5 Bro. Parl. Ca. 131. sup. 584.

So, if a mob of rioters board a ship, for the purpose of obliging the captain to sell a cargo of corn at an inferior price, and in consequence of this boarding, the ship be stranded, and a quantity of the corn lost; this is a loss by stranding, within the usual memorandum, and, in an action on a policy on the corn, it must be so laid in the declaration; nor could the insured recover in this case, upon a count for a loss by detention of people; because this mob did not constitute a people within the meaning of the policy: Neither could the insured recover for a loss by pirates; because, this being a policy on corn, the insurer was liable for no partial loss, unless it were a general average, or the ship were stranded; and this was not a general average, because the whole adventure was never in jeopardy; for the persons who took the corn intended no injury to the ship, or any part of the cargo but the corn.

So where goods were insured on board a Spanish ship, from Nassau to Campeachy.—The ship, having a licence from the British governor at Nassau, sailed for Campeachy in the Spanish main; and having arrived off that port, made signals for launches to come out, (as is usual in this contraband trade), into which the goods insured were put, for the purpose of being run on shore. In the attempt the goods were seized by two Spanish government brigs.—In an action on the policy, the declaration stated, 'That, before the goods were discharged or safely landed, they were, in a hostile and forcible manner, seized, captured, and carried away by persons, then being at war with our lord the king, to the plaintiffs unknown.'

N. Pitt v. Lushington, 4 T. R. 722, sup. 147, 436.

If rioters board a ship and occasion a stranding, the loss cannot be recovered on a count for detention of people, or for a loss by pirates, but only upon a count for a loss by stranding.

Matthie and others v. Potter, 3 Bosc. & Pul. 223.

British goods are seized in an attempt to run them into the Spanish main, as being contraband.—The insured cannot, in this case, declare as for a loss by capture jure belli.

‘known.’—It was objected at the trial that this averment was not supported by the evidence. But Lord Alvanley, who tried the cause, over-ruled the objection, and the plaintiffs had a verdict.—The court, however, upon motion, set the verdict aside. Mr. Justice Chambre said, he had no hesitation in saying, that, in his opinion, the plaintiffs ought to have been nonsuited, because the evidence produced did not support the averment of loss in the declaration.

If a loss happen in consequence of the captain's mistake, this cannot be declared upon, as for a loss by the perils of the sea.

The cause of the loss must be stated according to the truth of the case. The defendant has a right to insist upon this, in order that he may have an opportunity of demurring, or moving in arrest of judgment, if it be not sufficiently averred. If, therefore, a loss happen in consequence of the captain's mistaking his course; and, in the declaration, it be alleged that it arose from the perils of the sea, contrary winds, and other misfortunes, the plaintiff cannot recover.

Gregson v. Gilbert, B. R. 23 G. III. Park 62.

The captain of a slave ship mistakes his course, whereby a scarcity of water ensues, and a number of the slaves are thrown overboard to save the rest: It is not sufficient to state in the declaration that, by contrary winds, currents, &c., the ship was retarded, and the slaves perished for want of water,

Thus: In a declaration on a policy on slaves it was stated, —‘That, by the perils of the sea, contrary winds, currents, and other misfortunes, the voyage was so much retarded, that a sufficient quantity of water did not remain for the support of the slaves and other people on board, and that a certain number of the slaves perished for want of water.’—Upon the trial it appeared that the ship, being bound from Guinea to Jamaica, had missed the island, and that the crew were reduced to great distress for want of water; that the captain consulted with the crew, and it was unanimously agreed upon, that some of the slaves should be thrown overboard, in order to preserve the rest; and that, at the time this resolution was formed, there remained but one day's full allowance of water at two quarts per man (a). The jury, upon this evidence, found a verdict for

(a) It were impossible to pass over the mention of this transaction without some sentiment of reprobation. False reasoning has never been carried to the length of maintaining that human beings, however degraded their condition, could be justifiably cast into the sea, like so many bales of goods, to lighten a ship for the plaintiff, with 30l. a head for every slave thrown overboard.—The court, upon motion, granted a new trial, being of opinion, that the declaration did not state the loss according to the truth of the case.—Lord Mansfield said,—“ This is a very uncommon case, and deserves further consideration. There is great weight in the objection, that the loss is stated in the declaration to have arisen from the perils of the sea, and that the currents, &c. had made the ship foul and leaky. Now, does it appear by the evidence that the ship was foul or leaky? On the contrary, the loss happened by mistaking Jamaica for another place.”—Mr. Justice Buller said,—“ The declaration does not, in any part of it, state the loss which has been the occasion of this demand; and it would be very mischievous if we were to overturn this objection. Suppose, for a moment, that the underwriters, in some cases, are liable for the mistake of the captain; yet, if they are not liable in others, the nature of the loss must be stated in the declaration, that the defendant may have an opportunity of moving in arrest of judgment, if it be not sufficiently alleged. But it would be impossible for the defendant, in this case, to move in arrest of judgment; for the facts of the case, as proved, are different from those stated in the declaration. The point of law in arrest of judgment cannot be argued from the facts stated on the record; and the declaration in this case states the loss to have happened by the perils of the sea.”

a ship in a storm. Every thing on board, however precious, ought to be thrown overboard sooner than the meanest slave. Some have supposed that, in a case of extreme necessity, a part of the crew might be sacrificed to save the rest, and that the fate of the victim should be determined by lot equally amongst all. But others, upon juster principles, maintain, that whoever, under pretence of saving the ship, should throw any human creature into the sea, whether by lot or otherwise, is guilty of homicide; for no man, in order to save his own life, has a right to take away the life of another, who makes no attack on him. Vid. Puffend. lib. 2. c. 6. § 3. ff. de reg. jur. 32. Cic. off. 1. 3, c. 23.

But the loss need not be stated in the very words of the policy.

In stating the cause of the loss, the best way is to alledge it, as nearly as may be, in the words of the policy : As if the loss be by barratry, it ought regularly to be stated to have been occasioned “ by the barratry of the master and “ mariners.” But it will be sufficient if it be stated in words which import the same thing.

Knight v. Cambridge, 2 Ld. Ray. 1349 ; 1 Str. 581. 3 Mod. 230, sup. 443.

If it be alleged that the loss happened by the fraud and negligence of the master ; this is a sufficient allegation of barratry.

Thus, where it was alledged, that, per fraudem et negligentiam magistri, navis prædicta depressa et submersa fuit, et totalitur perditæ et amissa fuit, et nullius valoris devenit :—

It was objected that this was not within the meaning of the word barratry, and that the allegation should have been express, that the ship was lost by the barratry of the master ; and that, though barratry may import fraud, yet it does not import neglect.—But the court were unanimously of opinion that there was no occasion to aver the fact in the very words of the policy ; but if the fact alledged came within the meaning of the words, it was sufficient (a).

Where salvage is to be recovered, it is sufficient to state the injury which occasioned it.

Where salvage is to be recovered it is not necessary to declare for salvage, eo nomine. It is sufficient to state the accident or injury which occasioned that charge, without stating specially the particular circumstances which led to it.

Carey v. King, Ca. Temp. Hard. 304.

Thus :—The plaintiff declared, ‘ that the ship ‘ sprung a leak and sunk in the river, whereby the goods ‘ insured were spoiled :’—The evidence was, that some of the goods were spoiled, and some saved ; and the question was, whether the plaintiff might give in evidence

(a) The particular manner in which the loss in that case was occasioned does not appear in any of the printed reports of it. But in a MS. note of the arguments of Stamma v. Brown, taken by Mr. Ford, (cited by Lord Ellenborough in Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East 135.) the case of Knight v. Cambridge is cited to shew that “ if the master sail out of the port without paying the port duties, whereby the goods are forfeited, lost, or spoiled,” that is barratry ; and Lord C. J. Lee, in the same case of Stamma v. Brown, 2 Str. 1174, compared it to the case of a sailing out of port, without paying the duties, whereby the ship was subjected to forfeiture, which, he said, had been holden to be barratry ; probably alluding to Knight v. Cambridge.

the expence of salvage, that not being particularly laid in the declaration as a breach of the policy.—Lord Hardwicke, C. J. said;—" I think it may be given in evidence; for the insurance is against all accidents. The accident laid in the declaration is, that the ship sunk in the river; it goes on and says, that, by reason thereof, the goods were spoiled, which is the only special damage laid: Yet it is but the common case of a declaration that lays special damage, when the plaintiff may give evidence of any damage that is within the cause of action as laid; and though it was objected that such a breach of the policy should be laid, as that the insurer may have notice to defend it; it is so in this case, for they have laid the accident, which is sufficient."

The two insurance companies being corporations can do no act but by deed under their common seals. Their policies of insurance, therefore, being under seal, no action of assumpsit will lie upon them, but only debt or covenant.

Only debt or covenant will lie on the policies of the two insurance companies.

By the stat. 6 G. I. c. 18. § 4., each of these companies is directed to provide such a stock of ready money as shall be sufficient to answer all just demands upon their policies for any losses that may happen, and to pay the same from time to time, according to the tenor of their policies: ' And in case of refusal, the insured may bring his action of debt, or on the case (a), bill, suit, or information of the money demanded, against the corporation refusing to pay as aforesaid, in any of His Majesty's courts of record at Westminster.—And in such action the plaintiff may declare, " That the same corporation is indebted to him in the money so demanded, and have not paid the same according to this act;" and thereupon the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover against the same corporation double damages besides full costs of suit.'

The 6 G. I. c. 18. prescribes a form of declaring in debt.

(a) This act must have been drawn by some person very little skilled in legal forms. An action on the case is here given on their policies under seal; and this is followed by a form of declaring in debt.

This last clause absurdly subjected these companies to double damages, besides costs, in actions which they could not prevent or avoid, for want of a provision in the act to oblige the insured to make discovery of his loss before action brought. This being found to encourage suits for the sake of double damages was soon repealed by a clause in a subsequent statute. These corporations are now, therefore, only liable to pay their losses in the same manner as private underwriters (a).

The venue may be changed if wrong laid, unless it be by deed.

If the venue in the declaration be laid in a wrong county, the court, upon motion, will change it to the county where the policy was made (b), unless it be by deed; in which case the court will not change the venue, without some special ground being laid to induce them to depart from the general rule (c).

The premium may be recovered back in an action for money had and received.

If the insured seek only to recover back his premium; the proper form of action is indebitatus assumpsit, for money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff.

SECT. III.

Of the Plea, and bringing Money into Court.

In what cases the general issue is the proper plea.

THE most usual plea to an action on a policy of insurance is the general issue, non assumpsit; which not only puts in issue every fact alleged in the declaration, but also enables the defendant to give in evidence any matter that goes to disaffirm the contract, or to discharge the plaintiff's demand under it (d).—If, therefore, the defendant would dispute the legality or the validity of the policy; if he would deny the interest of the insured, and shew the policy to have been a wagering one; if he would prove that the insured has been guilty of misrepresentation, concealment, or any other fraud; that the ship was not sea-worthy; that the voyage insured was not the voyage intended; that the ship sailed on a different voyage from that described in the policy; that there had been a deviation; that no loss, or at least not to the amount claimed by the plaintiff, had happened,—the general issue is the proper plea (a).

(a) Vid. stat. 8 G. I., ch. 30, § 25.—(b) And. 66, 2 Str. 1180, Say. Rep. 7, 2 T. R. 275.—(c) 1 T. R. 781.—(d) Doug. 106, 7. Vid. Eul. N. P. 152. Parson v. Lee, 2 Bos. & Pul. 330, sup. 655.

Though the compliance with every warranty expressed in the policy, or implied in the contract, is an affirmative which it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove; yet, in answer to the general evidence from which such compliance is usually presumed, the defendant may, under the general issue, give express evidence of a non compliance: As, that the ship did not sail with convoy; that she never obtained sailing instructions, or had unnecessarily quitted the convoy; that she was enemy's property, though warranted neutral; that she had forfeited her neutrality, &c.

Under the general issue, the defendant may shew non-performance of a warranty

(a) In the case of Goram v. Sweeting (2 Saund 205), the defendant, to a declaration for a total loss by the perils of the sea, pleaded that the ship arrived safe; "absque hoc, that the ship, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, were sunk in the sea and lost."—Upon demurrer to this plea, it was objected that the traverse being in the conjunctive, if issue had been taken on it, and so much as an anchor or cable had been saved, the defendant would have been entitled to a verdict, though every thing else had been lost.—The court gave judgment for the plaintiff.—Saunders, who was counsel for the defendant, and probably drew the plea, concludes his report in much displeasure at the judgment of the court, who, he says, decided without much consideration, or well understanding the case. The plea was one of those artful expedients to gain an unfair advantage, in which the bar, in Saunders's time, and, indeed, Saunders himself, were but too fertile. Special pleas, in assumpsit, to avoid or disaffirm the contract, or discharge the plaintiff's demand under it, are now quite exploded. The plea of non assumpsit which puts in issue every material allegation in the declaration, and under which the defendant may prove whatever shews that, ex equo et bono, the plaintiff has no right to recover, is now the only plea ever pleaded in actions on policies of insurance, which are meant to be tried upon the merits only.

Or that the insurance was double.

So the defendant may shew that it was a double insurance, and that the plaintiff had already recovered to the amount of his interest against the underwriters in another policy, to whom the defendant has made contribution (a).

By stat. 19 G. II. c. 37. the insured must disclose how much he has insured in the whole.

To enable the defendant to discover whether there be a double insurance in any case, he may, under the stat. 19 G. II., c. 37. § 6, call upon the plaintiff to declare in writing, within 15 days, what sum he has insured in the whole, and how much he has borrowed on bottomry or respondentia, for the voyage in question or any part of it (b).—It is a little singular, however, that this act provides no means of compelling the plaintiff to deliver this declaration, nor any punishment for delivering a false one. The court would, probably, after the expiration of the 15 days, stay the proceedings till a satisfactory declaration were delivered. An action would, perhaps, lie at the suit of the insurer against the insured, either for refusing to make such declaration, or for delivering a false one (c).

When the defendant may plead a tender.

Where the question between the parties is, not whether the underwriters be liable to pay any thing to the insured, but only how much they shall pay, it will be advisable for them to tender, before any action brought, the sum which, under all the circumstances, they conceive to be fully sufficient to satisfy every fair claim of the insured. When such tender has been made and rejected, it may be pleaded, with non-assumpsit as to the residue of the plaintiff's demand.—The plaintiff, by his replication, may either deny the tender; or confess it, and join issue on the plea of non assumpsit as to the residue, and upon that issue proceed to trial for further damages.

When he shall bring money in to court.

When the underwriter in such case, has omitted to make a tender before process has been sued out against him, he should bring the money into court (d).—Before the stat. 19 G. II.

(a) Vid. sup. ch. 4. § 4.—(b) Vid. sup. 129.—(c) Vid. 2 Inst. 74, 104. F. N. B. 161.—(d) Vid. sup. ch. 15, § 1.

c. 37, it would seem that this was not permitted in actions on policies of insurance: and yet, in assumpsit, and covenant for the payment of money, and in debt also, even where the plaintiff might have recovered less than the sum demanded, this practice had been allowed long before (a). But by this act (§ 7.) it is provided, 'That in debt, covenant, or any other action on any policy of insurance, the defendant may bring into court any sum or sums of money; and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept the same, with costs to be taxed, in full discharge of such action; and shall afterwards proceed to trial, and the jury shall not assess damages exceeding the money brought into court; the plaintiff shall pay the defendant in such action, the costs to be taxed.'

It has been already shewn that an insurance on the property of an alien enemy is void; and that no action can be maintained on any such insurance, either at his own suit, or on his behalf (b). If, therefore, an action on a policy be meant to be defended on that ground, it may be specially pleaded in bar, being matter of law, which does not go to the gist of the action, but only to the discharge of it (c).

As to the two insurance companies, though the clause of the stat. 6 G. I. c. 13. § 4. which gave double damages against them, was repealed by the stat. 8 G. I. c. 30. § 25.; yet the form of the policy remained, and it was still necessary to sue them either in debt or covenant; from whence this inconvenience arose, that these companies, when sued, were obliged to plead specially (d); because the general issue, non est factum, only puts Whether alien enemy ought to be pleaded, or given in evidence under the general issue.

The two insurance companies may, to debt, plead nil debet, and to covenant, non infregit conventionem; and the jury may give the whole, or such part of the sum insured as the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

(a) 5 Mod. 212. 1 Vent. 356. 2 Salk. 596, 7. 1 Lord Ray: 255.—(b) Vid. sup. ch. 2. § 1.—(c) In the case of Brandon v. Nesbitt, 6 T. R. 23, sup. 38, it was pleaded; but in Brislow v. Towers, 6 T. R. 35, sup. 39, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and the fact was found by the special verdict.—(d) If the form of declaring mentioned in the stat. 6 G. I. c. 18. § 4. (which does not mention or even refer to the policy) had been adopted in actions against these companies, the inconveniences puts in issue the existence of the instrument upon which the plaintiff declares (a). The consequence must have been, that the parties were often entangled in the intricacies of pleading; and even when an issue was at length joined, it frequently happened that the whole merits could not come in question, and the jury were obliged to find a verdict for the whole sum insured, though in justice only a small part of it was due. This drove the defendants to seek relief in courts of equity, when the matter in question might as well have been determined at once by the jury, in like manner as in the case of private insurers (b).—To remedy this inconvenience, the stat. 11 G. I. ch. 30. § 43. provides,—‘ That in all actions of debt against either of the said corporations, upon any policies of insurance under their common seal, it shall be lawful for them to plead generally that they owed nothing to the plaintiff in such action; and in actions of covenant upon such policies to plead generally, that they have not broke the covenants in such policy contained, or any of them. And if issue be joined thereupon, it shall be lawful for the jury, if they see cause, to find a verdict for the plaintiff, and to give such part only of the sum demanded, if in debt, or so much damages, if in covenant, as it shall appear to them, upon the evidence, such plaintiff ought in justice to have,’ conveniences here enumerated might have been avoided; because, to such a declaration the defendant might have pleaded nil debet, and upon that plea the parties might have gone to trial upon the merits, whatever those merits might have been, in like manner as upon the general issue in an action of assumpsit upon a common policy. But, unfortunately, plaintiffs were not compelled by the statute to adopt the form of declaration therein given; and they, or at least their attorneys, were too much interested to pursue a different course.

(a) 5 Co. 119.—(b) Vid. recital to the stat. 11 G. I. c. 30. § 43.

SECT. IV.

Of the Consolidation Rule.

WE have already seen that the underwriters on common policies only bind themselves severally, that is, each for the amount of his own subscription, and not jointly; because it would be impossible to find any number of underwriters who would be willing to bind themselves for each other, as they must do if the contract were joint; and, indeed, since the establishment of the insurance companies, such a policy would be void by the stat. 6 G. I. c. 18. (a). Hence the insured, even if he were so disposed, cannot bring a joint action against all the underwriters on a common policy, but must seek his remedy by a separate action against each. This, though it necessarily results from the form of the contract, was a subject of complaint so long ago as the time of Queen Elizabeth (b); and it cannot be denied that it enabled the insured, if his demand were disputed or delayed, to proceed to trial in all the actions, however small his demand might be against each underwriter, and thus subject each to the entire costs of an action. They therefore often found it to be the wiser policy, rather to submit to an unjust demand, than subject themselves to such heavy charges. Sometimes, indeed, they sought relief in courts of equity, which granted injunctions to stay the proceedings in all the actions but one, the defendants in the rest undertaking to pay, according to their subscriptions, if the plaintiff should recover in that one.

This being found to be very inconvenient, and little less expensive than the oppressive proceeding against which the underwriters sought relief, an attempt was at length made

The necessity of consolidating actions on policies of insurance.

This was formerly done by courts of equity.

First attempt to do this in a court of law.

(a) Sup. 46.—(b) Vid. the preamble to stat. 43 Eliz. c. 12, sup. 25.

by Mr. Serjeant Eyles, in the year 1731, in a case where 28 actions had been brought on a policy, to stay the proceedings in all but one, the defendants in the rest entering into a rule of court that those causes should abide the event of that one. But the plaintiff refusing to give up his advantage, and consent to such a rule, the court declared they could do nothing in it (a).—It has been said (b) that ‘ Mr. Justice Denison intimated, that if the plaintiff persisted, against his own interest, in his right to try all the causes, the court had the power of granting imparlances in all but one, till there should be an opportunity of trying that one action; that Lord Mansfield then stated the great advantage resulting to each party by consenting to the application which was made; and added, that if the plaintiff consented to such a rule, the defendant should undertake not to file any bill in equity for delay, or to bring any writ of error, and should produce all books and papers that were material to the point in issue; and that this rule was afterwards consented to by the plaintiff.”—It is not precisely stated when, or upon what occasion, this passed. From the manner in which it is introduced, it would seem as if it had passed in the above case of — v. Glover. But neither Mr. Justice Denison or Lord Mansfield was a judge till many years after that case. It is extremely probable that after Lord Mansfield came to preside in the court of King’s Bench, he and Mr. Justice Denison did, upon some occasion, express sentiments similar to those ascribed to them; because it is well known that Lord Mansfield, soon after his coming into that court first established the consolidation rule, and settled the practice upon it in its present form. It is singular, however, that Sir James Burrow, who has reported the decisions of the court of King’s Bench for many years after Lord Mansfield came to preside there, has published no report of the case in which so important an alteration of the practice first took place.

(a) Vid. — v. Glover, Hil. 5 G. II. & Barnardist. 103.
 —(b) Park introd. p. 50.

Be this as it may, it is now the constant practice, where a number of actions are brought upon the same policy, to consolidate them by a rule of court, or by a judge's order, which restrains the plaintiff from proceeding to trial in more than one, and binds the defendants in all the others to abide the event of that one. But this is done upon condition that the defendant shall not file any bill in equity, or bring any writ of error, for delay.

The nature of the rule, and the terms on which it is usually made.

But besides these, the court, upon a proper ground being made by the plaintiff, will impose any other terms upon the defendants, which, under all the circumstances, appear reasonable: As, that they shall produce, at the trial, all books, papers, &c. in their custody, material to the point in issue; that the defendant in the action to be tried shall admit his subscription to the policy, the interest of the insured, the loss, or any other fact, upon which the question intended to be tried does not turn, or which is not meant to be seriously disputed. But the court will not impose any terms on the defendant out of the ordinary course, without his consent, which, however, a defendant, who only means to litigate fairly and honorably, will never refuse, when it is only to save the trouble and expence of proving facts which are not disputed. On the other hand, the court, in consideration of these unusual concessions, will impose any reasonable counter-terms on the plaintiff, which the defendant may have to propose.

Mutual admissions.

It is no part of the consolidation rule that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to try the other causes if he please. Such a liberty would defeat the end proposed by the consolidation rule; and, therefore, if the plaintiff will not consent to the rule without this term, the court will grant imparlances in all the causes but one, till he consent (a).

It is never made a part of the rule that the plaintiff may try the other causes if he please.

Thus has a practice, which was often attended with ruinous consequences to the one party or the other, at length, by the wisdom of the judges, been converted into an effectual means of obtaining substantial justice for Benefit resulting from this rule.

(a) Per Cur. Brown v. Newnham, E. 25 G. III. B. R. MS.

both, at a moderate expence, in cases where the obstinacy or dishonesty of plaintiffs might, before this regulation took place, have rendered that almost impossible.—On the one hand, the court may stay the plaintiff's proceedings for any length of time, if, through perverseness, or the cunning of interested or illiberal advisers, he refuse his consent to consolidate the actions upon proper terms: If, on the other, the defendants will not accede to such terms, the court, to punish them, may permit all the actions to proceed.

All the defendants are bound by the verdict in the cause tried.

But though, by the rule, the defendants undertake to be bound by a verdict in the action which is to be tried, yet this must be understood to mean such a verdict as ought to stand, as a final determination of the cause. It is certainly very beneficial to the parties that there should be but one trial for all the underwriters on the policy; but then that trial should be a satisfactory one (a). And therefore, if the plaintiff obtain a verdict, but the defendant apply for and obtain a new trial, the other defendants shall not be obliged to pay their money till the ultimate decision of the cause in favour of the plaintiff (b). And in cases of insurance, therefore, the courts should, in general, be less strict, and sometimes grant new trials upon less decisive grounds than in other cases. Sometimes, indeed, the insured, where he is not aware of the nature of the defence that is meant to be set up by the underwriters, or where there is a very doubtful or difficult question to be tried, will not agree to consolidate; but will proceed to trial in one cause at a time, reserving to himself the power of bringing his case again and again under discussion, so long as he has any hope of success.

If an attorney sue out a writ of error, though for manifest error, this will be a breach of the rule.

By the terms of the consolidation rule, the defendants are bound generally not to bring any writ of error; the meaning of which is, that, after a fair trial, and substantial justice has been done, no writ of error shall be brought, though manifest error appear on the face of the record. For even then, the writ of error being against the justice of the case, the court will hold the party strictly to the terms of the rule by which the plaintiff has been prevented from proceeding in the ordinary course of law. If, therefore, under such circumstances, the defendant's attorney bring a writ of error, the court will grant an attachment against him for his contempt in such a breach of the rule^(a).

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, 1 Bl. 464.—(b) R. Hodgson v. Richardson, 3 Bur. 1477.

Sect. V.

Of the Trial.

IF the parties proceed to trial upon the general issue, which most frequently happens, the plaintiff, as has been already observed, must, as in all other cases, begin by proving every material allegation contained in his declaration.—If any of the facts of the case, on either side, have been agreed to be admitted, these admissions are reduced into writing and signed by the attorneys on both sides, and being read, they supply the place of actual proof.

Proof of the plaintiff's case.

In every litigation upon commercial subjects, and particularly in matters of insurance, it is highly proper, nay in some cases absolutely necessary, that the parties should mutually admit every fact that is not meant to be seriously disputed, in order that the case may be put upon its true merits with as little expence, vexation, or delay as possible. Commercial liberality and professional honour both equally require that this species of candour should be carried as far as the fair and just pretensions of the parties will admit. Nothing can more conduce to the ends of justice, nothing can more exalt our national character, or promote the true interests of commerce, than such mutual concessions.

The necessity of mutual admissions.

The rules of evidence are, in general, the same in trials upon policies of insurance as in other cases. There

(a) R. Camden v. Edie, 1 H. Bl. 21.

Ridout v. Johnson,
E. 11 An.
Bul. N P. 283.

In general, an underwriter cannot be a witness in an action on a policy.

Bent v. Baker,
3 T R. 27.

But if the broker who effects a policy, subscribe it himself, after the other underwriters have subscribed it;—he may be a witness for the other underwriters, if they release him from all contribution for costs, though an action be depending against him, and he has joined in a bill in equity against the insured, for a discovery.

are only three cases to be found in our books upon points of evidence which may be thought peculiar to insurance. The first is a very short note, in which it is said to have been determined, that in an action on a policy of insurance, any who have insured upon the same ship cannot be witnesses.—Mr. Justice Buller, from whose book the above note is cited, in delivering his judgment in the following case of Bent v. Baker, says, that he took great pains, but without success, to get the real statement of that case, thinking that it might have been determined on its own particular circumstances. “However,” says he, “in consequence of that determination, judges at nisi prius have frequently rejected underwriters as witnesses. Nor is it extraordinary that, at nisi prius, they should have been guided by the only case upon the subject, without much examination into the grounds of it.”

In the second case, which was solemnly determined upon great consideration, one Bowden, the broker who had effected the policy, was produced as a witness on behalf of the defendant. It appeared that Bowden had subscribed the same policy immediately after the other underwriters; that an action was then depending against him for the same loss; and that he and the other underwriters had filed a bill in equity against the insured for a discovery, in order to avoid the policy.—It was objected on the part of the plaintiffs, that he was not a competent witness for the defendant. Upon this the defendant produced a release to Bowden of all demands for any contribution of costs, both in law and equity, and the costs of the suit in equity were tendered to the plaintiffs, with an undertaking to dismiss their bill, which the plaintiffs refused.—The witness was rejected by Lord Loughborough; and the question of his competency coming before the court of King’s Bench upon a bill of exceptions, it was there determined, that, under the circumstances, he was a competent witness for the defendant, and that his testimony ought to have been received.—Lord Kenyon founded his opinion on the ground that the witness was not interested.—Mr. Justice Ashurst thought that, as he had acted as broker, he could not afterwards, by subscribing the policy, or by any

any other act of his own, deprive either party of his testimony.—Mr. Justice Buller was of opinion, that if the witness was competent to answer any question, he ought not to have been rejected generally; and that, on the principle of necessity alone, he ought to have been received; as he might be the only person who, from the nature of the thing, could speak to a representation, for instance, made by himself to the underwriters.

This case affords a sufficient proof, that brokers and others, who act as agents, either for the insured or the insurers, ought never to be underwriters (a).

The last of these cases was a policy on goods from London to Emden; and it appeared that the ship, meeting with difficulties in her voyage, put into the Texel, where she was seized by the Dutch.—The defence set up was, that the goods were originally destined for the Texel, and not for Emden.—To prove that Emden was the real destination of the ship, and that she sailed for that place by the direction of the owners of the goods, the plaintiffs called the captain, who was a part owner of the ship.—It was objected, that he was not a competent witness. But Sir James Mansfield, Chief Justice, who tried the cause, overruled the objection, and the plaintiffs had a verdict.—In support of an application to the court to set this verdict aside, it was contended, that, as the ship had deviated from the voyage insured, the plaintiffs were bound to shew that she was driven into the Texel by necessity; but that, if she deviated without necessity, the owners of the ship were answerable to the owners of the goods, and consequently, the captain, being a part owner, had a direct interest.—But the court held, that he was a competent witness to prove that, by the direction of the owners of the goods, the ship originally sailed on the voyage insured, though not to prove that the deviation was justified by necessity.—Mr. Justice Rooke said, that the ground upon which he concurred in this decision was, that as the captain acted as the agent of the owners of the goods, and with their knowledge, they could have no action against him, as had been alleged on the part of the defendant.

De Symonds v. De La Cour, 2 New Rep. 374.

In an action on a policy on goods, the captain, who is a part owner of the ship, is a competent witness to prove that the port of destination in the policy was the true destination of the ship; but not to prove that a deviation was justified by necessity.

(a) Vid. sup. 307.

The evidence generally adduced on the part of the plaintiff is reducible to the following heads :

1. Proof of the contract ;
2. ——— payment of the premium ;
3. ——— the interest of the insured ;
4. ——— compliance with warranties ;
5. ——— the loss.

1. Proof of the Contract.

The policy being proved, is conclusive evidence of the contract ; and no parol evidence can be received to vary the terms of it.

The first step on the part of the plaintiff is to prove the contract, which is done by producing the policy and proving the defendant's subscription to it. This, if there be no variance, is conclusive evidence of the contract stated in the declaration ; and the general rule is, that no evidence can be received of any parol stipulation or agreement to alter, control, or qualify it (a).

Kaines v. Knightly, Skin. 454.

A parole agreement that the risk should begin at a place different from that inserted in the policy, cannot be received in evidence.

As, where an insurance was made "from Archangel to "Leghorn ;" and upon a trial at bar, the defendant endeavoured to set up a parole agreement, made before the subscription, that the adventure should only begin from the Downs :—It was objected, that unless such agreement be put in writing, it shall be taken that the policy speaks the minds of the parties ; and to suffer policies to be defeated by agreements not in writing, would be to lessen their credit, and render them of no value.—Lord C. J. Pemberton said, that policies were sacred things ; and that a merchant should no more be allowed to go from what he had subscribed in them, than he that subscribes a bill of exchange, payable at such a day, shall be allowed to say that it was agreed to be upon a condition, &c.

(a) Yet see the case of Bates v. Grahham, Salk, 444. sup. 344. and the other authorities cited in ch. 8. § 4.

when the bill may have been negotiated: For though neither of them is a specialty, yet they are of great credit, and much for the support, convenience, and advantage of trade.—The jury, however, found contrary to the direction of the court. But this verdict was set aside; and upon another trial at bar, the next term, there was a verdict for the plaintiff, according to the direction of the court.

Witnesses may be examined, however, to prove an usage, as explanatory of a clause in a policy; but their opinion of its meaning is not admissible evidence (a). Questions of construction are questions of law, which the judges only are competent to determine; and the opinion of no other person, whatever may be his ability or experience, can ever be looked upon as of authority in our courts, or received in evidence before a jury.

Witnesses may prove an usage as explanatory of a clause in the policy; but their opinions are not admissible.

With respect to usage, it is a sort of natural law, formed out of our habits, our interests, and the universal consent of mankind. In all maritime affairs, it is regarded as the surest interpreter of the law. There the maxim, Optima est legum interpretis consuetudo, particularly applies. In questions of insurance, established usages must in all cases be adhered to; and in doubtful cases, they are the safest guide we can follow. If the usage of trade in any instance be not sufficiently known or rightly understood, it is advisable to consult the most experienced merchants. Still, however, the force of usage is not to destroy the law. Usage is to be consulted only where the law is doubtful. Where the law is clear, it must prevail. The law is permanent; but usages sometimes change, and often disappear with the circumstances which gave them birth.

How far the usage of trade ought to be regarded.

Policies are often subscribed by an agent in the name of the underwriter, and in strictness, the procuration or authority of the agent, thus to subscribe for his principal, ought to be proved. Few defendants, however, would ever think of availing themselves of the want of such proof in an action which ought never to be tried but upon some point fairly disputable. An instance, however, occurs where the attempt was made.

How procuration shall be proved.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, in Lyons v. Bridge, Doug. 512. Vid. also Lord Mansfield's judgment in Carter v. Boehm, sup. 479.

Neale v. Krwing,
1 Esp. Rep. 61.

In an action on a policy, the broker was called to prove the subscription. He said that the defendant's name had been subscribed by one Hutchins; he did not know by what authority, but that Hutchins was in the constant habit of subscribing policies in the defendant's name, and had done several for him and for others to his knowledge.---It was objected that Hutchins might have done this by a power of attorney, which might have been limited, or for a particular purpose; and therefore should have been shewn, that it might appear that Hutchins was properly authorised.---But Lord Kenyon over-ruled the objection, being of opinion that the acts of Hutchins held him out to the world as properly authorised; and his having subscribed several policies in the defendant's name, was sufficient evidence of that authority to charge the defendant: That if Hutchins was only a particular agent for the defendant, it lay on him to shew it, not the plaintiff.

2. Proof of Payment of the Premium.

Proof of the policy is proof of the payment of the premium.

Every policy contains a clause by which the underwriters confess the receipt of the premium, after the rate of so much per cent.; and the policy being proved, is therefore evidence of its having been paid.

Policies are, in general, effected by the intervention of brokers, between whom and the underwriters open accounts are usually kept, in which the brokers make themselves debtors for all premiums, and take credit for all losses which they are authorised to receive from the underwriters; and these accounts are settled and adjusted at stated periods. In general, therefore, the underwriter looks to the broker only for his premium. It often, indeed, happens that the underwriter knows not who the insured is; and as he gives the insured a receipt for the premium upon the face of the policy, it must be supposed that, that, having thus discharged him, if the premium be left unpaid, he gives credit only to the broker, and from him only can he recover it (a).

3. Proof of the Interest of the Insured.

The next thing to be proved is the interest of the insured (b). This may be done by any documents which are evidence of the property which the insured has in the ship or goods insured, and of the value of that property; such as bills of sale, bills of lading, invoices, and proof that the goods were on board (c), bills of charges of the out-fit, custom-house clearances, &c.; and any deficiency in this species of proof may be supplied by parol evidence. So, if the insured have exercised acts of ownership, by directing the loading, &c. of the ship, it has been holden that proof of the payment of the people employed, is sufficient proof of interest in the ship (d).

How the interest shall be proved.

The rules of evidence in such cases, where no fraud is suspected, are not very rigidly adhered to:—Therefore where an action was brought upon a policy of insurance on a cargo of goods purchased at Peterburgh; the plaintiff, in order to prove his interest, produced a bill of parcels from the vendor at Peterburgh, with his receipt to it, and proved his hand-writing. The defendant objected that this was no evidence against the underwriters: But Lord C. J. Lee, who tried the cause, held it to be sufficient evidence of the plaintiff's interest.

Ruffel v. B lim, 2 Str. 1127.

A bill of parcels with the vendor's receipt, for goods bought abroad, is sufficient proof of interest.

In the second section of this chapter (e) it has been shewn that, in the declaration, the interest may be averred either generally or specially; and that, under a general averment of interest, the insured may prove any species

Upon a general averment of interest the insured may prove any species of interest that is deemed insurable, in any aliquot parts of the thing insured.

(a) Vid. sup. 291.—(b) As to what shall amount to an insurable interest, vid. sup. ch. 4, passim.—(c) Per Lord Kenyon in M^r Andrews v. Ball, 1 Esq. Rep. 373. sup. 469.—(d) Per Lord Kenyon, at N. P. Amery v. Rogers, 1 Esq. Rep. 209, sup. 619.—(e) Sup. 682.

of interest he may have in the ship or goods insured. It is also there shewn that it is unnecessary to state the quantum of the interest in the declaration; for as the plaintiff in assumpsit recovers according to the evidence pro tanto, he may under a general averment of interest in the entire thing insured, prove an interest in any aliquot part, and recover damages for the loss in proportion to such part.

Upon a valued policy, it is only necessary to prove some interest.

If the policy be an open one, the real value of the plaintiff's interest must be proved;---if it be a valued one, it has been holden that the insured needs only to prove some interest, to take the case out of the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37; because the underwriter, by subscribing the policy, has admitted the value there stated; and if more were required, the agreed valuation would signify nothing (a). And yet the value in the policy is only to be taken as prima facie evidence of the amount of the interest of the insured. For though this value is admitted by the insurer; yet, as he admits it upon the mere representation of the insured, if he find it to be fallacious, and that the specified value was fictitious, and only a cover for a wager, it cannot be supposed that he is so far concluded by his admission, as not to be at liberty to dispute the value, and shew by evidence, that it was meant as a mere evasion of the act (b).

Yet the value in the policy is only prima facie evidence, and may be disputed.

Upon a policy on goods, a respondentia bond is no evidence of interest.

In an action upon a policy on goods, the plaintiff cannot give in evidence a respondentia bond, as proof of interest in the goods upon which the money was borrowed, though they were of greater value than the sum insured; because bottomry and respondentia interests are always insured as such, and there is no instance of an insurance on respondentia under the denomination of goods (c).---Where money has been lent on respondentia on East India voyages, the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, § 5, considers the

In East India voyages the lender on bottomry can only insure the sum lent, and the borrower the surplus value of the goods.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, in Lewis v. Rucker, 2 Bur. 1171, sup. 624.---(b) Vid. sup. 288.---(c) R. Glover v. Black, 3 Bur. 1394. 1 Bl. 399, 405, 422. sup. 317.

borrower as having a right to insure only for the surplus value of the goods, above the money borrowed; and the lender as having a right to insure for the sum lent. If either were to insure for more, it would be a wager (a).

But the usage of a particular trade may sanction a departure from this rule ---As where the captain of an East Indiaman made an insurance on "goods, specie and effects" on board; he was permitted, in an action on his policy, to give in evidence of his interest, money which he had laid out in the course of the voyage, and for which he charged respondentia interest (b).

But the usage of trade may sanction a departure from this rule.

It would seem, however, that, upon a policy on goods generally, the insured may be permitted to give in evidence of his interest, a mortgage or other special lien (c).

An interest in goods may be proved by a mortgage or other special lien.

In an action upon a policy on bottomry or respondentia securities, evidence of the execution of the bottomry or respondentia bond, and of the interest of the obligor in the ship or goods, is sufficient proof of interest in the insured; and in such case, the obligor himself is a competent witness to prove his own interest in the ship or goods on which he borrowed the money (d).

The execution of a bottomry bond, and the interest of the obligor, are sufficient proof of interest in the obligee; and the obligor may prove his own interest.

Upon a policy upon a ship, the possession of the insured, as owner, is prima facie evidence of property, until further evidence be rendered necessary in support of the title thus made, in consequence of its being impeached by contrary proof on the other side.

Proof of possession is prima facie evidence of title to a ship.

Therefore, where it was proved by the captain that the insured were the persons by whom, as owners, he was appointed and employed; this was holden to be sufficient evidence of ownership, though it afterwards appeared by his answers, on cross examination, that the ownership

Robertson and another v. French, 4 East 136.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, l. c. 3 Bur. 1400.—(b) Vid. Gregory v. Christie, sup. 272.—(c) Semb. Glover v. Black, 1 Bl. 423. sup. 317.—(d) Vid. 1 Bl. 396.

was derived to the insured under a bill of sale executed by himself, as attorney to one L. W. the former owner. For it did not, on that account, become necessary for the insured to produce that bill of sale, or the ship's register, or to give any further proof of their property; these documents being perfectly consistent with a title in the insured.

Marsh v. Robinson, 4 Esp. Rep. 98.

One of several insureds may declare on a policy, and aver himself sole owner.—A verbal appointment of the captain is prima facie evidence of ownership.—No person can have an insurable interest in a ship, unless he be upon the register.

So, where a ship was insured in the name of "Elizabeth Marsh and son," and the son brought an action on the policy in his own name only, and averred in the declaration that he was solely interested; and, to prove this, he called the captain, who swore that he had been employed by the plaintiff who verbally ordered him to take the command, to pay the seamen, and draw bills on him on account of the ship.—It was objected, 1st, that the averment in the declaration did not enable the plaintiff to prove a sole interest in himself; and, 2dly, that the evidence of the captain was not sufficient to establish that fact; as the orders given by the plaintiff might have been given by an agent or broker.—But Mr. Justice Le Blanc, who tried the cause, overruled both objections, and held that the acts done by the plaintiff were prima facie evidence of sole ownership, and sufficient to call on the defendant to prove the contrary. The defendant then shewed that at the time when the policy was effected the ship stood registered in the names of Cummins, McMasters and Co., and that there was no change in the registry till after the policy was effected.—Mr. Justice Le Blanc held this to be conclusive against the plaintiff's title, the stat. 26 G. III. c. 60. (Lord Liverpool's act) requiring that, where there is a change of owners, there shall be an indorsement on the certificate, accompanied by the oath of the parties; and that till this is done a purchaser has no insurable interest (a).

Though the sentence of a court of prize, sitting in a neutral country, be illegal; yet, if the neutral country acquiesce in it, a

With respect to ships, it has been determined in the

(a) Vid. Camden v. Anderson, sup. 65, 115.

High Court of Admiralty (a), that a sentence of condemnation pronounced by a court of prize, sitting in a neutral country, was illegal; and that a sale under such sentence would not transfer the property to a neutral vendee.--- This decision, and the reasons upon which it was founded, were afterwards recognised in the court of King's Bench, where it was holden that a condemnation by a French consul at Bergen in Norway had not the effect of divesting the property of a captured ship out of the original owner (b). Since then Lord Kenyon, in a case at nisi prius, said that, though he approved of that decision, yet where the neutral country acquiesced, and permitted the court of prize of a foreign belligerent to exercise its functions there, it varied the case; and that a British subject might derive a title to a ship under a sentence pronounced by such court (c).---But it is not easy to discover a good ground of distinction between these cases.

title to a ship
may be derived under its sentence.

4. Proof of Compliance with Warranties.

Every material averment in the declaration must be proved. One of the most material is that of the truth of such affirmative warranties, and the performance of such executory ones, as are contained in the policy; such as, that the ship or goods insured were neutral property; that the ship sailed within the time limited by the policy; that she departed with convoy; that she was of the force warranted; that she was manned with the stipulated complement of men, &c.—Such averments must be strictly and literally proved; for these warranties being in nature of conditions precedent, the compliance with them is an essential part of the plaintiff's title; and a non-compliance with any warranty contained in the po-

The truth of affirmative, and the performance of executory,
warranties, must be strictly and literally proved.

(a) Vid. Case of the Flad, Owen, 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 135, sup. 389.—(b) Vid. Havilock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 268, sup. 596.—(c) Vid. Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. Rep. 25.

licy, to whatever cause this may be imputable, and whatever may have been the cause of the loss, deprives the insured of all claim to the indemnity meant to be secured to him by the contract.

Proof of neutral property.

In the case of a warranty that the thing insured is neutral property, it is usual at the trial to give general evidence of the truth of that warranty; and leave it to the defendant to falsify it, or prove a breach or forfeiture of it. The evidence adduced by the defendant, for this purpose, is usually a sentence of condemnation as prize by one of the belligerent powers, either on the ground of the thing insured having originally been enemy's property, or because the ship, by some misconduct, had forfeited her neutrality. Copies of the sentence and of the other proceedings in the court of admiralty, properly authenticated, are always deemed sufficient evidence of the fact of condemnation, and of the grounds upon which it proceeded (a).

5. Proof of the Loss.

The true cause of the loss must be set forth in the declaration.

The accident or misfortune which was the cause of the loss must, as we have already seen (b), be distinctly and explicitly set forth in the declaration, in order that the insurer may have notice of the case against which he is to prepare his defence.

The loss must be proved to have happened during the continuance of the risk.

To charge the insurer, the loss must appear to have happened during the continuance of the risk; and cases have frequently occurred in which this was the principal question. What shall be the commencement and duration of the risk has been already fully treated (c); and little need be added here upon this subject. Suffice it to say, that in the case of a ship, if she be insured from a place, it will be sufficient to prove that she weighed anchor, or broke ground, in order to sail on the voyage insured. If the insurance be at and from a place, the risk commences from the time of subscribing the policy, if the ship be at home; or from the first moment of her arrival at the place specified, if that be in a distant part of the world.—If the risk on the ship be from the loading of the goods on board, then proof that any part of the cargo has been shipped, will be evidence of the commencement of the risk.

(a) Vid. sup. ch. 9, § 6. n. 2, where it is fully shewn in what cases the sentence of a foreign court of admiralty shall have validity in our courts, and be deemed conclusive evidence to falsify this warranty. Consult also the other sections of the same chapter.—(b) Sup. 687.—(c) Sup. 246.

If the insurance be on goods, the underwriter may, if he think proper, call on the insured to prove that they were put in risk. This may be done by the testimony either of the persons who shipped them, or of those who received them, on board the ship mentioned in the policy. But the best evidence of this is the bill of lading, which, if bonâ fide made, is in all countries considered as an authentic document, and conclusive evidence of the quantity and species of goods laden on board; because the captain, who must exhibit it on his arrival at the port of destination, is interested that it shall not include more in it than he has on board to deliver.—It is, as Valin justly observes, the true and specific proof of the loading, and not only evidence, as between the captain and the merchant, but also against insurers and all others (a). —The underwriter may, however, impeach the bill of lading on the ground of fraud or collusion. But the insured cannot allege any thing in contradiction to it.

The loss may be proved by the parol testimony of the master, officers, and crew of the ship, or by any other legal evidence that can be adduced for that purpose.

The protest of the captain, so long as he is living, is in no case evidence on the one side or the other; the only use that can be made of it is to contradict his testimony, if in the case of a ship.

In the case of goods.

A protest is not evidence, while the person who made it is living.

(a) Valin, h. t. p. 604. Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 144. Emerig. §. 1, p. 314.

he vary from it. And its being shewn by the insurance broker to an underwriter as containing an account of the loss, for which the insured claimed, will not make it evidence even against the insured whose broker thus produced it.

Senae v. Porter,
7 T. R. 178.

The broker's shewing it to an underwriter, with other papers relating to the loss, on demanding payment, will not make it evidence against the insured.

Thus:—An insurance broker applied to an underwriter for payment of a loss, producing the different papers relating to the subject, and, among the rest, the protest signed by the captain. The underwriter told him he had looked into the papers, and as there was a point in the case, he would not pay the loss. In an action on the policy, it was contended on the part of the defendant, that the protest was made evidence by the plaintiff, as a paper delivered by his agent to the defendant, containing an account of the loss on which he rested his claim; and therefore, that it amounted to a declaration made by the plaintiff to the defendant of the facts on which he required payment.---Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, being of opinion that the protest was not admissible evidence, the plaintiff obtained a verdict.—On a motion for a new trial, the court were clearly of opinion that the protest, of itself, could not be evidence; and its having been in the broker's hands, and shewn by him to the defendant, on an application for payment, would no more render it evidence, than a bill in equity could be made evidence against the plaintiff, because its contents must have been shewn to the defendant.

If a loss by capture be alleged, the plaintiff cannot prove a loss by perils of the sea.

The loss must appear to have arisen from the very cause alleged in the declaration, and no other. If, therefore, a loss be alleged in the declaration to have been occasioned by capture, the plaintiff cannot, under such an averment, prove a loss by the perils of the sea, or by any other cause than capture (a).

If a mob board a ship and run her on shore, whereby goods are lost; this is a loss by stranding, and not by detention of people or by pirates.

So, if there be two counts in the declaration, one for a loss by detention of people, the other for a loss by pirates; the plaintiff cannot, on either of these counts, give in evidence that a mob of rioters had boarded the ship, in order to compel the captain to sell a cargo of corn at an inferior price; and that in consequence of this boarding, the ship was stranded and a quantity of corn lost. This could only be given in evidence upon a loss by stranding (a).

(a) Vid. Kulen Kemp v. Figne, 1 T. R. 304. sup. 130.

Though it is a maxim in law that fraud shall never be presumed, but must be strictly proved; and it is a rule, founded on that maxim, that in questions of insurance, he who charges barratry, must substantiate it by conclusive evidence (b); yet it has been determined that proof of the captain's having carried the ship out of the regular course of the voyage, for fraudulent purposes of his own, is, primâ facie, sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover as for a loss by barratry; without shewing negatively, that he was not the owner, or that this was not done with the owner's consent (c).

No evidence can be given of any loss unless it be the immediate consequence of some peril insured against. That which is only a remote consequence of such peril is not within the policy. If this rule were not adhered to, it would be impossible to draw the line, and the inquiry into the remote consequences of an accident or misfortune would be infinite.

Therefore, where the plaintiff, upon a policy on slaves in the African slave trade, declares for a loss by the perils of the sea, he cannot give in evidence a loss occasioned by throwing slaves overboard on account of a scarcity of water, occasioned by the captain's mistaking his course (d); nor a loss by the death of slaves who perished for want of proper food, occasioned by extraordinary delay in the voyage arising from bad and tempestuous weather (e).

So, where an insurance was made on a ship and cargo, in the slave trade, 'At and from Bristol to the coast of Proof that the captain was guilty of barratry, is sufficient, without shewing, negatively that he was not owner, &c.

Every loss must be an immediate consequence of some of the perils insured against.

In the case of slaves.

Jones v. Schmitz, at N. P. Trin. Vac. 1785, 1 T. R. 130, n.

Slaves are insured against mortality by mutiny; and, in a mutiny, some are killed, others die of their wounds, others of chagrin, &c. The insurer is liable for these who were killed or mortally wounded, in the mutiny; but not for those who died from other causes, though the remote consequences of the mutiny; nor for the diminution in value occasioned by the disposition manifested by the mutiny.

(a) R. Nesbit v. Lushington, 1 T. R. 783, sup. 230, 504.—
(b) Baratarie crimen nunquam est presumendum, sed conclusivissimè probandum. Casaregis, disc. 1, n. 60; disc. 225, n. 99. Vid. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 372.—(c) R. Rossi v. Hunter, 4 T. R. 33, sup. 531.—(d) R. Gregson v. Gilbert, sup. 491, 554.—
(e) R. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656, sup. 491.

‘Africa, during her stay and trade there, and from thence to her port or ports of discharge in the West Indies.’ There was a memorandum on the policy, in these words;— ‘The insurers are not to pay any loss that may happen in boats during the voyage, (mortality of negroes by natural death excepted) and not to pay for mortality by mutiny, unless the same amount to 10l. per cent. to be computed upon the first cost of the ship, out-fit, and cargo, valuing negroes so lost at 25l. per head.’—In an action upon this policy, the demand was for the value of a number of slaves lost by mutiny.—The evidence of the captain was that he had shipped 225 prime slaves on board; that on the 23d of May, before he sailed from the coast of Africa, an insurrection was attempted; that the women seized him on the quarter-deck, and attempted to throw him overboard, but he was rescued by the crew; that the women, and some men, threw themselves down the hatchway, and were much bruised; and 12 men and a woman died of their bruises, and from abstinence; that there was a general insurrection, and the crew were from imminent necessity, obliged to fire upon the slaves, and attack them with weapons; that several slaves took to the ship’s sides, and hung down in the water, by the chains and ropes; some for about a quarter of an hour; that several were killed by firing, several wounded, several died from swallowing salt water, or of their wounds, or from bruises, some from chagrin at their disappointment, some from abstinence, some from fluxes and fevers,—in all to the amount of 55, who died during the voyage.—The underwriters had paid for 19, who were either killed during the mutiny, or died of their wounds, which amounted to 15 per cent. For the plaintiff it was contended that, though the rest did not actually die in the mutiny, or of any wounds received at that time; yet, as they had all died in consequence of the mutiny, the underwriters were liable. Another consequential loss was, that the circumstance of the mutiny had so lessened the value of the slaves, in the estimation of the planters, that they were sold for 17l. a head less than they would otherwise have fetched.—Lord Mansfield, field, who tried the cause, said ;—" I think the underwriters not answerable for the loss of the market, or the price of it : That is a remote consequence, and not within any peril insured against by the policy. The question for the jury will be, whether any of those, who died by any other means, except the being fired upon, or in consequence of the wounds and bruises which they received during the struggle, are within the meaning of the policy, which insures against damage by mutiny. It is very clear that those who were killed by the firing, or died in consequence of their bruises during the mutiny, are within the policy ; the other complicated cases must be left to the jury. I think, clearly, those not within the policy, who, being baffled in their attempts, in despair, chose a mode of death, by fasting, or died through despondency. That is not a mortality by mutiny, but the reverse ; for it is by the failure of a mutiny.—The great class are such as received some hurt by the mutiny, but not mortal, and died afterwards from other causes ; as those who swallowed salt water, jumped overboard, &c."—This is the great point."—The jury found,—that all who were killed, or died of their wounds or bruises, which they received in the mutiny, though accompanied with other causes, were to be paid for : But, that all who had died by swallowing salt water, or leaping into the sea, or hanging upon the sides of the ship, without being otherwise bruised, or died of chagrin, were not to be paid for.

So, where the ship Fly was insured from Exeter to London, against capture only ; and the ship on her voyage was driven by a gale of wind on the coast of France, and there captured by the enemy.—In an action on the policy it was contended on the part of the defendant, that this was a loss by the perils of the sea, and not by capture.—But Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, held that this was clearly a loss by capture ; for had the ship been driven on any other coast than that of an enemy, she would have been in perfect safety. The jury, under this direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff.

If the plaintiff declare upon a loss by fire, in order to prevent the vessel and her cargo from falling into the hands

Green v Elmstie,
at N. P. Peake, 212.

A ship is driven by stress of weather on an enemy's coast, and there captured. This is a loss by capture, not by the perils of the sea.

Upon a declaration for a loss by fire, the plaintiff may prove that the captain set fire to the ship, to prevent her falling into the hands of the enemy.

hands of the enemy, he may prove that the vessel being pursued by a privateer, the captain and crew discharged her guns down her hatchway, and having set her on fire in several places, left her, and rowed ashore in the long-boat (a).

Gurey v. King,
Ca. temp. Hard.
304.

The plaintiff may give in evidence any loss immediately proceeding from the cause alleged.

But the plaintiff may give in evidence any loss or damage which is an immediate consequence of the accident or injury alleged in the declaration.—As where it was averred in the declaration, that the ship sprung a leak and sunk in the river, whereby the goods were spoiled: And the evidence was, that many of the goods were spoiled, but some were saved. The question was, whether the plaintiff might give in evidence the expense of salvage, though not particularly stated in the declaration, as a breach of the policy.—Lord Hardwicke said,—“ I think they may give it in evidence; for the insurance is against all accidents. The accident laid in the declaration is, that the ship sunk in the river: It goes on and says, that by reason thereof the goods were spoiled. This is the only special damage laid: Yet it is but the common case in a declaration that lays special damage, where the plaintiff may give in evidence any damage that is within his cause of action as laid. It was objected that such a breach of the policy should be laid that the insurer may have notice to defend it. Now it is so in this case, for they have laid the accident, which is sufficient notice, because some damage must have happened.”

But it must be a direct and immediate consequence of the cause alleged.

The loss must appear not only to have proceeded from the very cause alleged in the declaration, but also to be a direct and immediate consequence of the accident or misfortune which has happened to the very thing insured. Therefore an expense which is incurred in consequence of the accident or misfortune stated in the declaration, but which is not incurred in repairing the damage occasioned by it, cannot be given in evidence as proof of the loss within the meaning of the policy.

(a) Per Lord Ellenborough, at N. P. Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. Rep. 123. Vid. sup. 494.

losses have been settled, the provisions put on board the vessel, when she sailed, have been considered as part of the ship. The value of the ship alone comprehends the hull, the masts, the tackle, and the provisions. Then, if the provisions be included in a policy on the ship, and all the provisions be lost, the underwriters must make good the whole loss, whether it be a valued or an open policy. But it has been said, that if an accident happen after some of the provisions are consumed, the underwriters are entitled to a deduction to the amount of such provisions: I will answer this, as the argument applies, first to a valued, and then to an open policy. As to the first: From the nature of the policy, the provisions are not insured against all events; they are only insured against particular risks. Again, there is nothing from which there can be salvage: If the body of the ship, and every thing on board, be sunk, or burned, there can be no salvage. And, in case of an open policy, the insured must prove, by evidence, what was the value of the whole; and then the same reasons apply as in the case of a valued policy. With respect to the case of Robertson v. Ewer, I thought at first that it applied strongly to the present; and if I still entertained the same opinion, I would not, on account of any usage to the contrary among underwriters, overturn a solemn determination of this court: But that case, and the two others there mentioned, are clearly distinguishable from the present.—In all those cases the insured wished to charge the underwriters with the amount of the provisions consumed, during the time when the ships were detained. Of those, therefore, it is sufficient to say, that an insurance is on the ship for the voyage; but during a detention, the ship is not proceeding; and therefore the underwriters are not liable (a). This case also differs from Robertson v. Ewer in another circumstance: There, the provisions were con-

(a) There must be some mistake of the reporter in this place. It cannot be supposed that the learned judge ever meant to say, that while a ship is detained, she is not under the protection of the policy.

furnished by the slaves on board, and not by the ship's crew, and the slaves are considered as a part of the cargo. The words of Lord Mansfield, in that case, must be taken with reference to the case then before him. He was then speaking of a charge for provisions and during the detention of the ship, and for the maintenance of the slaves; and he said;—"There is no authority to shew that, on this policy, the insured can recover for such a loss; but it is contrary to the constant practice." Then he proceeded to say that, on a policy on a ship, sailor's wages or provisions are never allowed in settling the damages. Now, even if those latter words be taken in their general sense, and not confined to the case immediately before the court, they are accurate; for provisions, eo nomine, are not taken into consideration.—If the captain be obliged, in consequence of the detention, to purchase other stores for the remainder of the voyage, the underwriters are not answerable for these; but only for those which were on board at the time of the insurance, since they only formed a part of the value of the ship.—The usage of merchants, as to the construction of these instruments, stands unimpeached, and therefore it must prevail in this case."

When the expense of wages and provisions shall be a general, when a particular, average.

By the law of France (a), the expence of wages, and provisions of the seamen, during a detention, are reputed a gross, or general average, if the ship was hired by the month; but if hired for the voyage, this expence is borne by the ship alone, as a simple average.—Pothier (b) gives the following reason for this distinction. The wages of the sailors being included in the freight, when the ship is chartered for the voyage, the owner, who receives freight for the whole voyage, is bound to supply the labour of the sailors for the whole time of the voyage, of which the time of the detention makes a part.—On the other hand, when the ship is chartered by the month, the owner, receiving no freight during the detention, owes no service of the sailors to the affreighter. The affreighter therefore, ought, in consideration of the benefit he derives from the labour of the sailors, to pay for their labour and provisions during the detention.

(a) Ord. de la mar. tit. des avaries, art. 7. Vid. Emerig. tom. 1, p. 539.—(b) Tit. des chartes parties, n. 85.

But the usage of trade often controls the general construction of the policy; and what shall or shall not be protected as part of the ship and furniture depends, in some cases, on the usage of a particular trade.

As where an insurance was made, in the usual form, on a ship employed in the Greenland fishery; and, in an action on the policy, the question was, whether the fishing-tackle was included in the insurance on the ship, furniture, &c.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, said, that there was no doubt but that the boats, and rigging, and stores, belonging to the ship, were included; and as to the fishing stores, it must depend on the usage of the trade. On this, there was contradictory evidence. The plaintiff, however, obtained a verdict, which the court afterwards set aside, and granted a new trial, upon the ground that the evidence of the usage was principally in favour of the defendant.

In a former chapter we had occasion to observe that the captain's clothes, the ship's provisions, and goods lashed to the deck are not comprehended under the general denomination of "goods, wares, and merchandizes," in the policy; and that the insurer is not, therefore, liable for any loss on these articles unless they be specifically named (a).

Therefore, where an action was brought on a policy on goods, the property of the captain, for six months, the loss proved was chiefly for goods lashed to the deck, the captain's clothes, and the ship's provisions.—On the part of the defendant it was proved by an underwriter and a broker, that none of these things are within a general policy on goods; because the risk is greater, as to goods lashed on deck, than on other goods; and that a policy on goods generally, means only such goods as are merchantable, and a part of the cargo. They also swore that when goods like the present are meant to be insured, they are always insured by name, and the pre-

But the usage of trade often determines what shall be deemed part of the ship.

Hofkins v. Pickersgill, E. 23. G. III. B. R. MS.

Whether the fishing tackle in the Greenland whale fishery be included in a policy on the ship, depends on the usage of the trade.

The captain's clothes, the ship's provisions, and goods lashed to the deck, are not within a policy on goods.

Ross v. Hunter, at N. P. after Hil. 16 G. III. Park 20.

(a) Vid. sup. 319.

mium is greater.—Lord Mansfield said he thought it consistent with reason, and understood the usage to be so; and therefore the plaintiff withdrew a juror, the premium having been paid into court.

The insured on goods, is not entitled to freight paid pro rata itineris, during capture.

In an action on a policy on goods, the insured cannot recover for freight pro rata itineris paid by the owner of the goods to the owner of the ship; where the ship is captured and detained by a foreign power, and afterwards restored.

Paillie v. Modie
1 East, 25.
111. B. R.
MS.

Goods are insured, the ship and goods are captured and sold, but the sentence reversed, and the proceeds ordered to be paid to the owners:—The freight pro rata itineris, paid by the owner of the goods, is not a charge for which the insurers on the goods are liable.

Thus: In an action on a policy on goods, ‘At and from Nevis to Bristol,’ it appeared that the ship on her voyage was captured by the French, carried into Morlaix, and there condemned. Upon an appeal to the parliament of Paris, this sentence was reversed, and the ship and cargo were decreed to be restored; or the net proceeds thereof, if sold, to be paid to the claimants. The ship and cargo having been sold before this sentence was obtained, the money, after deducting all charges, was remitted to the plaintiff, who was agent for the owners of the ship, for the owners of the goods, and for the underwriters.—The underwriters paid the charges of the suit, and all other expences. The plaintiff (the common agent) paid to the owners of the ship, freight pro rata itineris; and the question was, whether he was to be reimbursed by the owners of the goods, or whether this was a loss within the policy, for which the underwriters were liable.—The court, after time taken to deliberate, were unanimously of opinion, that the underwriters were not liable to this charge.—Lord Mansfield said;—“The question is, whether the owner of the goods can charge the underwriters with this item, which was paid for freight pro rata itineris, by the owners of the goods to the owners of the ship. As between the owners of the ship, and the owners of the cargo, in case of a total loss, no freight is due: But, as between them, no loss is total, where part of the property is saved, and the owner takes it to his own use. Here the value of the goods was restored in money, which is the same as the goods: and therefore freight was certainly due pro rata itineris. But, as between the insured and the underwriters

As where a ship was insured, ‘At and from London to Newcastle and Marseilles, and from thence to the West-Indies.’—The ship, in distress, bore away for Minorca, where it being found necessary to repair her, she was unavoidably detained there a considerable time.—The insured brought an action on the policy, to recover the extraordinary wages and provisions expended during this detention: But Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, was of opinion that such a demand could never be allowed as a charge against the insurer on the ship; and a verdict was accordingly given for the defendant.

So, where an insurance was made ‘on ship and goods, from Offend to Dominique.’—The ship in her voyage having met with bad weather, and being in great distress, the crew threatened to take the command from the master, unless he would make for the first port. The master bore away for Ferrol to repair the ship; but by the time the repairs were finished, the crew deserted her. He then got another crew, and at the moment he was going to sail, the Spanish governor stopped him, and after detaining him 37 days, discharged him, and he proceeded on his voyage, and at length arrived at Dominique.—An action was brought on the policy to recover the loss incurred by wages, provisions, and demurrage, during the ship’s detention at Ferrol. On the part of the underwriters it was contended that the freight, and not the ship, is liable for this loss, and that the charge of demurrage could not be allowed upon this policy.—Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, was of this opinion, and non-suited the plaintiff.

So, where a ship was insured, ‘At and from London to Africa, during her stay and trade there, and to her port of discharge in the West Indies;’—the ship on her voyage from Africa, with a cargo of slaves, to her port of discharge in the West Indies, touched at Barbadoes for the purpose of watering, where she was detained a considerable time by an embargo, which had been before laid by the commander in chief on all ships at that island. The captain applied for leave to depart, and being refused, he sailed without leave, but was pursued by a sloop Fletcher v. Peole, at N. P. after East. 1769, Par 52.

Wages and provisions expended during a repair of sea-damage, is not a loss within a policy on the ship.

Eden v. Poole, at N. P. after Hil. 1785, Par 54.

Upon a policy on ship and goods, the insured cannot recover for wages provisions or demurrage, during a ship’s stay for repair, and detention by a foreign power.

Robertson v. Ewes, 1 T. R. 127.

The insured upon a policy on the ship, cannot recover the expense of wages or provisions occasioned by a detention under an embargo.

of war, and after a slight engagement, brought back, and the crew distributed among the men of war. The embargo continued from the 18th of December, till the 27th of January. The small pox broke out among the slaves on the 22d of January. In consequence of all this, and for want of mariners to navigate the ship, she was detained at Barbadoes above two months after the embargo was taken off. She then sailed to Jamaica, her place of discharge.—In an action on the policy to recover the amount of the additional wages and provisions occasioned by the ship's detention under the embargo, Mr. Justice Buller was of opinion that this policy, being upon the body of the ship, and the average loss thereon, exclusive of the charge for wages and provisions, being less than 3 per cent., the plaintiff was non-sued. Upon a motion to set aside this nonsuit, it was contended on the part of the plaintiff, first, that this loss, being occasioned by the embargo for which the insured might have abandoned, and recovered as for a total loss, he might recover a partial loss to the amount of the damage actually sustained (a); and secondly, that this was a loss occasioned by the barratry of the master, by his resistance to lawful authority.—But the court determined that the plaintiff had no right to recover on either ground.—Lord Mansfield said,—“There is no authority to shew that, on this policy, the insured can recover for such a loss; but it is contrary to the constant practice. On a policy on a ship, sailor's wages, or provisions, are never allowed in settling the damages. The insurance is on the body of the ship, tackle, and furniture; not on the voyage or crew. Here it is admitted that no damage was done to the ship, tackle, or furniture; and therefore I think the direction was right, and that the plaintiff ought not to recover.”—Mr. Justice Buller said;—“If the ship had been detained in consequence of an injury which she had received in a storm, though the underwriters must have made good the damage; yet the insured could not have claimed the amount of wages or provisions, during the time spent in repairing. The court only look to the subject matter of the insurance. Here the ship was safe; and the wages and provisions are no part of the thing insured."

(a) Vid. Rotch v. Edie, 6 T. R. 425. sup. 44, 511.

Yet, in the following case, which is not easily reconcilable with the three foregoing cases, it was the opinion of the court that a ship's provisions are protected by the policy, even when landed on a Bank Saul during a repair; and that they were to be considered as a part of the ship.

An insurance was made on a China ship, and, in the usual words, 'On the tackle, ordnance, ammunition, artillery, and furniture of the ship.—In an action on this policy, it appeared that while the ship was lying off Bank-Saul Island, in the river Canton, it became necessary to refit her, for which purpose, the stores and provisions were taken out of her, and put into a warehouse called a Bank-Saul, where they were destroyed by accidental fire.—At the trial, this accident was considered as if it had happened on-board the ship (a), and it was admitted that the policy covered all the articles but the provisions; and if they were not protected by the policy, then there would not be a partial loss of 3 per cent.—On the part of the defendant it was contended that the provisions, which were merely for the ship's crew, were not protected by a policy on the ship. But one of the jury, observing that it had been determined in Lord Mansfield's time, that they were included under the word 'furniture,' and that the merchants in the city had ever since acquiesced in this decision, there was a verdict for the plaintiff.—On a motion for a new trial the above case of Robertson v. Ewer was relied on as a clear authority to shew that the ship's provisions were not protected by a policy on the ship; and that, if provisions were included in the term 'furniture,' there could never be a total loss, after a consumption of any part of them.—The court, however, were unanimously of opinion that the underwriters were liable for the expence of the pro-

Yet a ship's provisions are considered as part of the ship, and are protected by the policy.

Brough v. Whitmore, 4 T. R. 206.

A ship's provisions, during a repair, are landed on a Bank Saul, and there consumed by fire. The underwriters on the ship and furniture are liable.

(a) Vid Pelley v. Roy. Ex. Aff. 1 Bur. 341, sup. 269.

vifions which were bought to replace those confumed by the fire, which was an accident within the words of the policy.—Lord Kenyon faid ;—“ When it was ftated, at the trial, that provisions were included in the word ‘fur-niture’ I confeß I was fomewhat at a lofs to know to what extent the underwriters were liable on words fo indefinite as thofe which are ufed. If the provisions be infured as part of the out-fit of the fhip, and they were destroyed by one of the perils infured againft, there is an end of the queftion ; a lofs has happened within the meaning of the policy, and confequently the defendant is liable. But it was faid in the argument, that the inftant any of the provisions were confumed on board, there could not be a total lofs. But the anfwer is, that that comes within the wear and tear of the fhip ; and it might as well be faid, that if a maff were a little injured, there could not be a total lofs. The cafe of Robertfon v. Ewer is clearly diftinguifhable from the prefent. Here the provisions were confumed by an accidental fire on board the fhip, (for the ifland and the fhip were, for this purpofe, the fame), and within the meaning of the policy ; but, in that cafe, they were confumed by the negroes, during the detention of the fhip (a).”—Mr. Juftice Buller faid, —“ It is perfectly clear that, in every inftance where

Distinctions between this cafe and that of Robertfon v.
Ewer.

(a) According to the Report of Robertfon v. Ewer, Lord Mansfield laid it down as a general rule, not refticted to any particular trade, that on a policy on a fhip, failor’s wages or provisions are never allowed in fettling the damages ; nor was it ever objected in that cafe, that the provisions had been confumed by the flaves. It is not likely, indeed, that fuch an objection could have been made ; for it is well known, that the food provided for the flaves was part of the cargo, and very different from that which was provided for the fhip’s company ; beftdes, the fhip’s company muft have confumed a part. But, be this as it may, if it be neceffary, in order to fupport the cafe of Robertfon v. Ewer, to fuppofe that the provisions, for which the infured wanted to charge the underwriters, were confumed by the flaves, and not by the crew, then the cafes of Fletcher v. Poole, and Eden v. Poole, where no fuch ground could be alleged, cannot be fufained.

loßes

BOOK THE SECOND.

Of Bottomry and Respondentia.

THIS subject may be treated under the following distribution ;

- I. Of the nature and form of the Contract ;
- II. Of the Parties to it ;
- III. Of the thing hypothecated ;
- IV. Of the principal and marine Interest ;
- V. Of the perils or risks to which the lender is liable ;
- VI. Whether he be liable to general average ;
- VII. Whether he be entitled to the benefit of salvage.

C H A P. I.

Of the Nature and form of this Contract.

BOTTOMRY is a contract in nature of a mortgage of a ship, on which the owner borrows money to enable him to fit out the ship, or to purchase a cargo for a voyage proposed ; and he pledges the keel or bottom of the ship, pars pro toto, as a security for the repayment : And it is stipulated that if the ship should be lost in the course of the voyage, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender also shall lose his money ; but if the ship should arrive in safety, then he shall receive back his principal, and also the interest agreed upon, which is generally called the marine interest, however this may exceed the legal rate of interest (a). Not only the ship

Bottomry defined.

(a) Vid. 2 Bl. Com. 458.

and

and tackle, if they arrive safe, but also the person of the borrower, is liable for the money lent and the marine interest.

Denomination.

The contract of bottomry is called by the French, contrat de prêt à la grosse aventure, or contrat à la grosse. In Le Guidon (a) it is called bomerie, and Molloy (b) says that it is derived from bomerie or bodmerie, a Flemish word which signifies the keel or bottom of a ship.

Respondentia.

When the loan is not on the ship, but on goods laden on board, which, from their nature, must be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, the borrower's personal responsibility is then the principal security for the performance of the contract, which is therefore called respondentia (c). In this consists the principal difference between bottomry and respondentia. The one is a loan upon the ship, the other upon the goods. The money is to be repaid to the lender, with the marine interest, upon the safe arrival of the ship, in the one case, and of the goods, in the other. In all other respects, these contracts are nearly the same, and are governed by the same principles. In the former, the ship and tackle, being hypothecated, are liable, as well as the person of the borrower; in the latter, the lender has, in general, only the personal security of the borrower.

Difference between them.

According to the French writers, the personal responsibility of the borrower is not, in all cases the only security of the lender. Where the money is lent for the outward and homeward voyages, the goods of the borrower on board, and the returns for them, whether in money, or in other goods purchased abroad, with the proceeds of them, are liable to the lender (d). But the following case shews, that in England, unless there be an express stipulation to that effect in the bond, the lender has no lien on the homeward cargo, nor any other security for his demand than the personal responsibility of the borrower or his sureties, if he has any.

(a) Ch. 18. — (b) De jur. marit. b. 2, c. 11, § 12. —
 (c) 2 Bl. Com. 458. — (d) Pothier, h. t. n. 34. Emerig.
tom. 2, p. 476. 561.

A respondentia bond, upon an East India voyage, was given by Fearon and Douglas in the usual form (a); and the condition, after reciting 'that the money was lent 'upon the goods laden, and to be laden, on board the ship ' Belvedere outward bound to China, was, that if the ship ' should proceed on her voyage and return within 36 ' months, (the dangers of the seas excepted) and if the ' borrowers, within 30 days after her arrival, should pay ' to the lender the sum lent, with the marine interest ' agreed on; or if, within the 36 months, the ship should ' be lost, and the borrowers should, within six months ' after such loss, account for and pay to the lender a ' proportionable average on all goods carried out, and the ' net proceeds thereof, and on all other goods which the bor- ' rower should acquire during the voyage, for or by reason of, ' such goods, and which should not be unavoidably lost, ' then the obligation to be void.'—The goods were dis- ' posed of in China, and other goods purchased there with the ' produce thereof, with which the ship returned home, and ' arrived in the Thames. The goods so brought from China ' were deposited in the warehouses of the India Company, ' and Douglas being dead, and Fearon having become bank- ' rupt,—the question was, whether the lender had such a ' lien upon, or interest in, the homeward cargo, or the ' proceeds thereof in the hands of the Company, as entitled ' him to claim it to the extent of his demand upon the ' bond.—The court determined that he had no such lien ' upon, or interest in, the homeward cargo.

Though it is extremely probable, as we have already ' shewn (b), that the contract of insurance was unknown ' among the ancients, it is certain that the Romans were well ' acquainted with that of bottomry, or rather respondentia, ' which they denominated nauticum fœnus or contractus tra- ' jectitæ pecuniæ; and it is treated of both in the Digest ' and the Code, de nautico fœnore. They called the sum lent

Bull. v. Fearon
& others, 4 Fag.
31).

The lender upon a respondentia bond in the usual has no lien or interest homeward purchased with the produce of the goods upon which the money was lent.

In use among the Romans.

(a) Vid. Appendix No. V.—(b) —Sup. 5.

Pecunia trajeciticia.

pecunia trajeciticia, perhaps because the borrower was used to take the money on board with him in specie, in order to employ it in trade in the course of the voyage; for such was probably the original destination of such loans among the Romans, who exported very little from Rome, but sent money from thence to purchase the merchandise which the consumption of that immense city demanded. The money thus lent was to be repaid, if the voyage proved fortunate, with a stipulated interest, which was called periculi pretium, sometimes usura maritima, or usura nautica; but upon this condition, that if the ship should be lost by the perils of the sea, in the course of the voyage proposed, the lender should lose both principal and interest.

If the money was spent on shore, it was not pecunia trajeciticia.

If the money was spent in the place where it was lent, it was not pecunia trajeciticia (a). But if it was laid out in the purchase of goods, which were embarked at the risk of the lender, then it retained its quality of pecunia trajeciticia. So that, with the Romans, as with the moderns, it was of the essence of this contract that the loan should be exposed to the perils of the sea, at the risk of the lender.

Whether the Roman nauticum fenus be materially different from the modern bottomry.

The author of Le Guidon (b) says that there is but little resemblance between the contract of bottomry, as it is in use in modern Europe, and the nauticum fenus of the Romans. But, with all due deference for the learned author of that treatise, it seems to me that, upon an attentive comparison of the one with the other, it will be found that they are still in principle the same; and only differ in the forms which modern regulations have given to the contract now in use.

How bottomry differs from a simple loan.

Bottomry differs materially from a simple loan. In a loan, the money is at the risk of the borrower, and must be paid at all events. Incendium ære alieno non liberat debitorem (c). But in bottomry, the money is at the risk of the lender during the voyage. Upon a loan,

(a) Si eodem loco consumatur, non erit trajeciticia, ff. de naut. fen. i.—(b) Ch. 18. art. 1.—(c) Cod. l. 11, si cert. pet.
only underwriters upon the cargo, it is a contract of indemnity, and the latter have nothing to do with the freight. The owner of the ship has a lien for his freight; but in the case of a loss, really total, no freight is due. In the case of a loss, total as between the insurer and insured, with salvage, the owner may either take the part saved or abandon; but in neither case can he throw the freight upon the underwriters; because they have not engaged to indemnify him against it, and have nothing to do with it."

The underwriters on goods are in no case liable for freight.

In assumpsit the plaintiff recovers damages according to the evidence pro tanto, and therefore he is not obliged to prove all the damages alleged in his declaration. Hence, though the plaintiff declare as for a total loss, he may recover as for a partial loss.—So, if he declare as for a total loss of the entire thing insured, when in fact he was only owner of, or interested in a part thereof, and the loss be only partial, yet he shall recover his proportion of such partial loss to part.

If the plaintiff declare upon a total loss, he may recover for a partial loss.

So, if he declare for a loss upon an entire thing, when he is only a part owner.

Thus:—An insurance was made on one fourth of a ship; and the insured declared expressly as for a total loss of the ship; but the evidence only proved a partial loss; nor was it attempted to prove a total one, the damage being so small that it might have been repaired for 50l.—It was objected at the trial, on the part of the defendant, that evidence of a partial loss, was not sufficient to maintain a declaration for a total loss, and it was suggested that the practice was contrary.—A verdict, however, was taken as for a partial loss, subject to the opinion of the court on the above question.—The court were clearly of opinion with the plaintiff.—Lord Mansfield said;—"I was satisfied upon principles, provided the practice did not interfere; but, having heard of no determination in support of the practice alleged, the case must stand upon principles; and, upon principles, it is clear that the plaintiff may, upon this declaration, recover as for a partial loss. This is an action of assumpsit, which is a liberal action; and the plaintiff may recover less than his declaration would support, though not more. There are two grounds of the plaintiff's de-Gardiner v. Crossdale, 2 Burr. 904, 1 Bl. 198.

Upon insur-

fourth of a ship, plaintiff declares as for a total loss; but proves only a partial loss; he shall recover such partial loss.

claration; the policy, and the damage to the ship. Whether this be a total or a partial loss, is a question that goes to the quantum of damages, not to the ground of the action. The ground of the action is the same, whether the loss be total or partial; both are perils within the policy. As to the defendant's not coming prepared to defend a partial loss; this, indeed, would be an objection, if it were true: But the defendant does, in truth, come prepared to shew, either that no damage had happened at all; or, at least, that damage had not happened to the extent alleged.—Neither could the defendant have been hurt by a judgment by default; for the plaintiff could not have recovered upon the writ of enquiry, more damages than he could prove that he had actually suffered. If this objection were to prevail, it would introduce the addition of unnecessary counts in the declaration. In an ejectment for more, the plaintiff may recover less: It is every day's practice.”—Mr. Justice Denison concurred, and said;—“In an action for damages, the plaintiff is to recover according to his proof, pro tanto; but he is not obliged to prove all that he has alleged. If it had been an action of covenant for pulling down a house, might not the plaintiff be entitled to damages for pulling down a part of it? This is no variance of the evidence from the declaration. The evidence tends, in a certain degree, to the proof of what is alleged in the declaration. Two counts would have been unnecessary.”

Rising v. Burnett, at N. P. C. B.
12 December
1798. MS.

One of several part owners of a ship may insure the freight generally, without mentioning what share he has in the ship; and he may declare generally, and recover according to his interest,

So, where the plaintiff was one of four part owners of a ship, and each insured the freight without mentioning that it was only a share of the freight that he was interested in.—The plaintiff, in his declaration, stated his interest generally, and not as being an aliquot part of the ship.—It was objected on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiff should have alleged his interest according to the truth, and not in that general form. That the register of the ship, which was produced, was conclusive evidence as to the persons who were owners, and of their respective shares; and the register shewed that the plaintiff was only owner of the fourth part.—Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, held, that this being an open policy policy (a), the plaintiff might recover according to his interest; and he had a verdict accordingly.

So, if the plaintiff prove a greater interest than he alleged in his declaration, this shall not preclude him from recovering to the extent of the interest he has alleged.

Thus, where the declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of one third of the ship insured; and it was proved that he had purchased the whole at one period; and there being no evidence to shew that he had since parted with any share of it, it was insisted that this was a variance.—But Lord Mansfield held that this was sufficient evidence; for, omne majus continet in se minus, and overruled the objection.

By the preamble to the second section of the stat. 19 G. II. c. 32, it appears that, before the passing of that act, if an obligor in any bottomry or respondentia bond, or an insurer in any policy of insurance, became bankrupt before a loss happened, it was made a question whether the insured in such policy, or the obligee in such bond, could be let in to prove his debt, or to receive any dividend under the commission: But now, by that section, it is provided, ‘That such obligee or insured shall be admitted to claim, and after the loss or contingency shall have happened, to prove, his debt, and to receive a dividend of the bankrupt’s estate, in proportion to the other creditors; and that the bankrupt shall be discharged from the debt owing from him on such bond or policy, in like manner as if such loss or contingency had happened, and the money had been payable, before the issuing of the commission.’

As the words of the above preamble refer only to bottomry contracts, and insurances on ships and goods on board, it became a doubt whether it extended to insurances upon lives, though the words of the enacting part are general; and it was supposed that the legislature could

A fortiori if he prove a greater interest than he alleged.

Page v. Rogers, at N. P. after Hil. 1785, 1 Ark 402.

By 19 G. II. c. 32, if an underwriter become bankrupt before a loss happen, the insured may claim; and after a loss, prove his debt under the commission, and receive his dividend, as if the loss had happened before the bankruptcy.

This statute extends to insurances upon lives.

(a) Had it been a valued policy, it would have made no difference in this case; for the insurer may dispute the amount of the interest of the insured if it be over-valued, as well in an action upon a valued policy as upon an open one,

not not have had insurance upon lives in contemplation, because the risk in such insurances may remain unsettled for many years:—But it has been determined that the general words of the enacting part are not restrained by the preamble; and that it comprehends all insurances, and consequently insurances upon lives (a).

Sect. VI.

Of the Recovery back of Losses improperly paid.

If an underwriter, after he has paid a loss, discover fraud, which before he was not apprized of, he may maintain an action to recover back the loss so improperly paid.

IT sometimes happens that, after a loss has been paid, the underwriter discovers that there was fraud in the original contract, or that there were circumstances attending the loss, which, if known at the time the loss was claimed, would have justified his resisting the demand. In such case, he may maintain an action against the insured for money had and received to his use, to recover back the sum so improperly demanded.—But if, at the time he paid the money, he knew, or might, upon enquiry, have been informed of the grounds upon which he could have resisted the claim, he cannot afterwards bring an action to recover it back; for this would open a door to infinite litigation. A fortiori if the underwriter had paid the loss under legal compulsion (b).—If, however, after the insured has recovered the loss, by process of law, the underwriter receive intelligence of the fraud, which, by no possibility he could have known while the suit was depending, he may, in that case, I conceive, maintain an action to recover back the money so wrongfully obtained from him (c); for this would not be trying, in the new action, any ground of defence of which he might have availed himself in the first.

(a) R. Cox v. Liotard, B. R. Hil. 24 G. III. Doug. 166, n. Vid. Pattison v. Banks, Cowp. 540; and Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232.—(b) R. Marriott v. Hampton, 7 T. R. 269. Scmb. cont. Moses v. Macfarlane, 2 Bur. 1005. Vid. Livesey v. Ryder, E. 22. G. 3. B. R.—(c) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 14.

only the legal interest can be reserved : But upon bottomry, any interest may be legally reserved which the parties agree upon.

The analogy between this contract and that of insurance is much stronger. In the one the lender, in the other the insurer, is liable to the perils of the sea ; the one receives the marine interest, the other the premium, as the price of the risk, which varies in each according to the length and danger of the voyage. The lender and the insurer are, in general, exposed to the same perils, which have the same commencement and end. Both are entitled to the benefit of salvage, and liable to general average. The marine interest, like the premium of insurance, is not due, if no risk be run, though this be prevented by the voluntary act of the borrower.

Analogy between bottomry and insurance.

But though these contracts thus far agree, they differ essentially in many respects. In bottomry, the lender furnishes the borrower with the money to purchase the goods which are put in risk ; an insurer, on the contrary, furnishes nothing of the subject matter of the insurance.—The lender, in taking upon himself the risk of the goods, does not contract any obligation to the borrower ; a loss by the perils of the sea does not make him a debtor to the borrower, but only prevents the borrower from becoming his debtor : Whereas, upon a loss happening, the insurer becomes a debtor to the insured to the amount of such loss, not exceeding the sum insured (a).—In case of shipwreck, the lender, by the general law, has a lien on the effects saved, to the extent of the sum lent and the marine interest, to the exclusion of the borrower ; whereas an insured has an interest in the effects saved, in common with the insurer, so far as he was uninsured.—The lender is not liable for particular average ; but the insurer is liable for this, unless he be exempt by express stipulation.—By the clause, free of average, insurers may be exempted from general average ; but, in a case where the lender is liable by law to general average, such a clause would be illegal and void (a). If the voyage be divisible into several distinct risks, the premium of insurance may be apportioned to each, and there may be a return for such as have not been begun; but, in bottomry, if the risk be once commenced, and no loss happen, the marine interest must be paid entire (b).

How they differ

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 6.

The utility of this contract.

This contract is of great utility in a country where the persons engaged in trade have not a sufficient capital to carry on their foreign commerce, by inducing those unskilled in trade to embark their money in it; and thus is formed a sort of partnership between the lender and the borrower, in which the one supplies capital the other skill and experience: The one takes upon himself the perils of the sea, and the other compensates him by a share of the profits of the adventure. But, except in this respect, this contract has no resemblance to a regular partnership, having in it no community of capital, no community of loss (c).

Not now much in use in this country.

Formerly the practice of borrowing money on bottomry and respondentia was more general in this country than it is at present. The immense capitals now engaged in every branch of commerce, render such loans unnecessary; and money is now seldom borrowed in this manner, but by the masters of foreign ships who put into our ports in need of pecuniary assistance to refit, to pay their men, to purchase provisions, &c. Sometimes officers and others belonging to ships engaged in long voyages, who have the liberty of trading to a certain extent with the prospect of great profit, but without capitals of their own to employ in such trade, take up money on respondentia to make their investments: But even this, as I am informed, is now not very frequently done in this country.

It is usually either in the form of a deed poll or a bond.

This contract, which must always be in writing, is sometimes made in the form of a deed poll, called a bill of bottomry, executed by the borrower (a), sometimes in the form of a bond or obligation, with a penalty (b). But whatever may be its form, it must contain the names of the lender and the borrower, those of the ship and the master; the sum lent, with the stipulated marine interest; the voyage proposed, with the duration of the risk which the lender is to run: It must shew whether the money be lent on the ship, or on goods on board, or on both; and every other stipulation and agreement which the parties may think proper to introduce into the contract (c).

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 46; Valin on art. 16, h. t.; Emerig. t. 2, p. 505.—(b) Emerig. t. 2, p. 397.—(c) Sav. Dict. h. t. Casaregis disc. 7, n. 2; Emerig. t. 2, p. 394.

It is essential to this contract that the marine interest be expressly reserved in it (d). Straccha (e), indeed, holds that, without this, the law would look upon the contract only as a simple loan, upon which the lender had gratuitously taken upon himself the perils of the sea. Emerigon, however, holds (f) that this being a contract founded in good faith, equity will supply the omissions occasioned by mistake or inadvertence; and that, as the lender subjects himself to the perils of the sea, and the borrower reaps the fruits of the adventure, commutative justice requires that the former should receive, beside the legal interest of his money, a satisfaction for the risk he has run.

The marine interest must be expressly reserved in it.

Whether equity would supply the omission of this.

(a) Vid. Append. No. VII. — (b) Vid. Append. No. VII. — (c) Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 30; Emerig. t. 2, p. 402. — (d) Pothier, h. t. n. 19. — (e) Introd. n. 24. — (f) t. 2, p. 406.

C H A P II.

Of the Parties to this Contract.

Who may lend on bottomry.

THE parties to the contract of bottomry are the lender and the borrower. Of the former, it is sufficient to say, that any person, who is in a capacity to contract, may lend money on bottomry.

Who may borrow.

With respect to the borrower, every person who has a vested assignable property in a ship or cargo, may, by the general law of merchants, borrow money on bottomry or respondentia thereon, to the extent of his interest.

When the master may hypothecate
the ship.

This contract seems originally to have arisen from the practice of permitting the master of a ship, in a foreign country, to hypothecate the ship, in cases of necessity, in order to raise money to refit (a). And it is essential to the safety of the ship and the success of the voyage, that the master, in the absence of the owners, should have this power, which is, indeed, by the marine law, implied in his appointment (b).

He can only do this in the absence of the owners.

But as the owners are presumed to give entire authority to the master, only in their absence, and for such affairs as they cannot themselves conveniently transact, he is not in fact master till after he sets sail. Till then, he is subject to their orders, and they have the power of dismissing him at pleasure; till then, therefore, he can transact no business of importance, but under their immediate directions (c). Hence, if the master borrow money on bottomry in the place where the owners reside, without their express authority, it can only affect his own interest on board. Yet, it is said that if the money thus borrowed be beneficially employed in supplying the necessities of the ship and in discharge of the owners, they are liable for the money thus laid out (d). But this liability must be understood as for money paid for their use, not upon the contract of bottomry.

Yet, if money borrowed where the owners reside be laid out on the ship, the owners shall be liable for it.

(a) Vid. 2 Bl. Com. 458 — (b) Per Holt, C. J. in Bernard v. Bridgeman, Hob. 12. — (c) Consolato del mare, ch. 236. — (d) Vinnius, ad ff. de exercit. § 4, p. 844.

Even in a foreign country, and in the absence of the owners, the master cannot take up money on bottomry, for any debt of his own (a), but only for the use of the ship, in cases of necessity; and this must appear in the written contract, otherwise the lender will neither have a lien on the ship, nor an action against the owners. The master in such case would be alone liable, though it should appear that the money was spent in supplying the necessities of the ship (b). Hence it would seem that originally the lender was bound to see to the application of the money advanced by him, and that he was obliged to prove this, to entitle himself to recover against the owners. But, as the law now stands, if it appear that the money has been fairly and regularly lent to supply the necessities of the ship, the misapplication of it by the master will not affect the claim of the lender, who will have his action against the owners, and his lien on the ship, without proving that the money was properly applied. He has no reason to mistrust the master, whom the owners have employed. But if he be an accomplice in any fraudulent misapplication of the money, the owners may impeach the contract upon that ground (c).

Even in a foreign country the master can only borrow money in case of necessity.

And this must appear in the contract.

But the lender is not bound to look to the due application of the money.

In a former part of this work (d), it was shewn that no British subject can legally trade with the enemies of the state in time of war: and that therefore an insurance upon such trading is void. It was also shewn that the insurance of the ships and effects of the enemy has, on several occasions, been prohibited by statute; and many arguments and authorities have been adduced to prove that, even at common law, such insurances are illegal. It is needless to repeat those arguments here, every one of which applies with equal, if not greater, force, to prove that the lending of money to the enemy upon bottomry is illegal, if not highly criminal.

Whether money may be legally lent on bottomry to an enemy, in time of war.

(a) Molloy, b. 2, c. 2, § 4. Laws of Oler. art. 1, 22.—
 (b) ff. de exercit. art. 7, Vinnius, ad id. Emerig. t. 2, p. 434.
 —(c) Loccen. l. 2, c. 6. n. 12. Emerig. t. 2, p. 441.—
 (d) Sup. 85.

C H A P. III.

Of the Thing hypothecated.

Money may be lent on whatever may be insured;

IT is a general rule that money may be lent on bottomry or respondentia, on whatever may be the subject matter of insurance. It may be lent on the body, tackle, furniture, and provisions of the ship, or upon all, or any part of the cargo; or upon both ship and cargo (a).

The borrower may take the money on board with him.

But money may be borrowed on respondentia without hypothecating any thing. The borrower may, and frequently does, take the money on board with him in specie, in order that he may employ it in trade in the course of the voyage; which, as has been already observed (b), was probably the original intention of such loans.

But the money, or its equivalent, must be exposed to the perils of the sea, at the risk of the lender.

But it is of the essence of this contract that the money lent, or something equivalent to it, be exposed to the perils of the sea, at the risk of the lender. And the same reasons of policy which forbid gaming insurances equally apply to wagers in the form of bottomry loans. If the borrower have no effects on board; or having some, he borrow much beyond their value, and agree to pay high marine interest, this will afford a strong ground to suspect fraud, and that the voyage will have an unfortunate end. Cum capitaneus, ad cambium receperit longe majorem pecunie summam quam fuerit risicum super navi existens, presumi debet sinistrum fuisse dolosum (c).

This practice is retained by stat. 22 C. 2. c. 11.

Our legislature long since found it necessary to restrain the mischiefs resulting from this practice, and therefore by stat. 16 C. II. c. 6, re-enacted and made perpetual by the stat. 22 C. II. c. 11, § 12, after reciting that,

(a) Pathier, h. t. n. 9.—(b) Sup. 735, 6.—(c) Casaregis, dif. 62, n. 7; Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 19, art. 19.

“Whereas

“Whereas it often happeneth that masters and mariners “of ships having insured or taken upon bottomry, greater “sums of money than the value of their adventure, do “wilfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship “under their charge, to the merchants and owners “great loss;” for the prevention thereof for the future, enacts, ‘That if any captain, master, mariner, or other ‘officer belonging to any ship, shall wilfully cast away, ‘burn, or otherwise destroy the ship unto which he be‘longeth, or procure the same to be done, he shall suffer ‘death as a felon.’

At Leghorn and some other parts of Italy, where gaming insurances are tolerated, wagers in the form of bottomry contracts are also allowed (a).—In France, it was the wise policy of the framers of the famous ordinance of 1681, to prohibit all gaming and wagering upon the events of maritime adventure; and therefore they did not only forbid all gaming insurances, but also all wagers in the form of bottomry contracts. It is therefore provided (b) that, in case of loss, the borrower upon goods shall not be discharged without proving that he had goods on board at the time of the loss, on his own account, to the amount of the sum lent.

In England it was not unusual, before the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, for persons to borrow money on the voyage, as it was called; that is, where the borrower, having nothing, either in the ship or cargo, which he could hypothecate, took up money on his own personal credit, and on the credit of his sureties, if he had any. The money thus borrowed was often taken on board, and usually employed in some commercial adventure depending on the success of the voyage; and therefore this might generally be considered as a legitimate loan upon respondentia. But the spirit of gaming having availed itself of this form of contract to cover wagers, particularly in long Wagers, in the form of bottomry contracts, are permitted in some parts of Italy.

They are prohibited in France.

The 19 G. II. c. 37, § 5, directs that, upon East India voyages the money shall only be lent on the ship or goods on board, with benefit of salvage to the lender.

(a) Casaregis, disc. 14, 15.—(b) Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 3, 14; vid. Emerig. t. 2, p. 496, 500; Valin, on art. 3, 14, h. t.

voyages, the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, after prohibiting insurances without interest, declares (§ 5.), ‘ That all money lent on bottomry or at respondentia, upon any ship or ships belonging to any of his Majesty’s subjects, bound to or from the East Indies, shall be lent only on the ship, or upon the merchandizes on board, and shall be so expressed in the condition of the bond; and the benefit of salvage shall be allowed to the lender, who alone shall have a right to make insurance on the money so lent; and in case it shall appear that the value of his share in the ship, or the effects on board, does not amount to the full sum or sums he has borrowed as aforesaid, such borrower shall be responsible to the lender for so much of the money borrowed as he has not laid out on the ship or merchandize laden thereon, with lawful interest for the same, in the proportion the money laid out shall bear to the whole money lent, notwithstanding the ship or merchandize shall be totally lost.’

Whether a wager, in the form of a bottomry loan, be a legal contract at common law.

It is said (a) that, as East India voyages only are mentioned in this act, and that as expressio unius est exclusio alterius, it follows that bottomry loans, where the borrower has nothing on board, may be legally made in all other cases, as at common law, except in the cases prohibited by the stat. 7 G. I. c. 21, § 2. (b).

It is certainly not a little singular that the same legislature which thought it necessary to prohibit such loans upon East India voyages, should not have thought the same prohibition equally necessary in all other cases. I cannot, however, admit the application of the maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius. If, indeed, the maxim were, exclusio unius est recognitio alterius, it might be more applicable. But such a maxim would have the effect of proving, that a statute which should be made to restrain one particular abuse, would sanction all others of the same nature; which is manifestly absurd. But, be this as it may, such an inference is not sufficient to prove that a species of gaming so mischievous in its tendency, had ever been sanctioned by the common law. Nothing short of a solemn decision of one of the supreme courts of Westminster, could give to such doctrine the stamp of authority; and I believe there has not yet been such a decision.

(a) Park, 411.—(b) Vid. inf. 754.

Many British subjects having, in the reign of George I., fitted out ships and clandestinely traded to the East Indies under colour of foreign commissions, the stat. 7 G. I. c. 21, § 2, made to restrain these practices, and to protect the monopoly of the East India company, amongst other regulations, declares, 'That all contracts and agreements, made or entered into by any of his majesty's subjects, or any person or persons in trust for them, for the loan of any money by way of bottomry, on any ship or ships in the service of foreigners, and bound to, or designed to trade in, the East Indies, shall be void.'

It is said (a) that this act does not mean to prevent the king's subjects from lending money on bottomry on foreign ships, trading to their own settlements in the East Indies; and it must be owned that, from the preamble to the act, it would seem that it had only in view to restrain the illegal commerce of British subjects with the East Indies, without any reference to that of foreigners; yet the above clause expressly, and in the most unqualified terms, restrains the lending of money on bottomry on any ship or ships in the service of foreigners (b). Whether a ship, the property of British subjects, fitted out by them, and laden with their merchandize, can be said to be in the service of foreigners, merely because she is furnished with a commission from a foreign state, is a question upon which there has not yet been any judicial decision.

In the year 1789 an action was brought in the court of Common Pleas on a respondentia bond, executed by the defendant, an American, to secure payment for a

The stat. 7 G. I. c. 21, prohibits the lending money on bottomry on foreign East India ships.

Whether this act restrains the lending of money to foreigners trading to their own settlements in India.

Samner v. Green, 1 H. Bl. 301.

It would seem that a respondentia bond for money lent by a British subject upon goods on board an American ship, on a voyage from Bengal to Rhode Island is void.

(a) Park, 412. — (b) Vid. sup. 128.

cargo of goods shipped by the plaintiff, a British subject at Calcutta, on board an American ship, homeward bound, from Calcutta to Rhode Island. The ship had sailed from England and landed a cargo of European goods in Bengal, previously to her taking in the cargo, on which the bond was given.—The defendant, being arrested on the bond, moved to be discharged out of custody on entering a common appearance, on the ground that, since the independence of the United States, an American ship was a foreign ship within the meaning of the above stat. 7 G. I. c. 21, § 2.—The court discharged the defendant.—Lord Loughborough said,—“We do not think it necessary upon this application, to give any decided opinion upon this act; but it would be improper to hold the defendant in custody, if there appear a probable ground that the contract which is the foundation of the action is void. I do not chuse to enter into the construction of the statute; but I think it probable that, in its true meaning, it would reach all trading to the East Indies for the purpose of sending goods to other parts of the world, contrary to the provisions of the company’s charter.”

Money may be borrowed on freight.

By the law of England, freight, as we have already shewn (a), may be insured, and consequently it may be hypothecated upon a bottomry contract.

In France money cannot be borrowed on freight, or on profit.

In France the borrowing of money by the owners of a ship, on freight not earned, is prohibited (b). The reason, as Valin informs us (c), is, because the lender would be at the mercy of the borrower, who would not much concern himself about freight, from which he could derive no profit. But it is permitted to borrow money on freight, already earned; that is, where the money borrowed is to be employed by the affreighter, in paying freight which he is bound to pay at all events. Freight, in that case, being an expence which the affreighter must lose if the ship should be lost without completing her voyage, is a proper subject of insurance, and consequently of a bottomry loan (d). Nor is it permitted by the French law to borrow money on bottomry on the profits expected upon goods, because profit is uncertain, and has no physical or substantial existence on board (a).

(a) Sup. b. 1, c. 3, f. 6, p. 91.—(b) Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 4.—(c) Valin on art. 4, h. t.—(d) Vid. sup. 91, 92.

Seamen may undoubtedly borrow money on any goods they may have on board; because, as far as relates to such goods, they are in the same situation as those of any other shipper. As to their wages, the same reasons of policy, drawn from the necessity of interesting them in the preservation of the ship, which prohibit their being insured, equally forbid their borrowing money on them (b).

Whether money may be lent on a ship or goods already exposed to the perils of the sea, is a question upon which some learned men have differed.—Valin (c) holds, that it makes no difference whether the loan be made before the ship's departure or afterwards; 'because,' says he, 'the presumption is, either that the money has been usefully employed in the things put in risk, or in paying what was due on that account.'—Emerigon (d), on the contrary, supposes that the original idea of bottomry was, that the money borrowed should be bestowed on the ship, or vested in goods for exportation (e); and that, upon this principle, this species of loan has been permitted and encouraged: But that, as soon as the ship sets sail the motive to this ceases; and a loan, after the ship's departure, could not be said to have purchased the goods already exposed to the perils of the sea.—This is plausible, but Valin's reasoning seems the most satisfactory.

Seamen may borrow money on their goods on board; but not on their wages.

Whether money may be lent on a ship or goods already in risk.

(a) Ord. de la mar. h. t. art. 4, Pothier, h. t. n. 14. Emerig. t. 2, p. 480. Vid. sup 94. V.d. Bynk quæst. jur. priv. lib. 4, c. 5, in which he cites a decision of the senate of Rotterdam, to shew that lucrum quod speratur, per leges nauticas affecuari non posse.—(b) Emerig. t. 2, p. 480.—(c) On a. l. 16, tit. de la f. f. se, tom. 1, p. 346.—(d) Tom. 1, p. 484.—(e) Tr. jectitia ea pecunia si quæ t. ans mare achitur:—Ed videndum an merces ex eâ pecuniâ compr. ita, in eâ causâ habeantur. et inter s. utrum etiam ipsa, periculo credit. ris, navigent: nec enim t. jectitia pecunia si. ff. de naut. fæ. 1

C H A P. IV.

Of the Principal, and marine Interest.

Of what the loan may consist.

TO constitute this contract, one party must lend the other a sum of money upon the usual conditions. Not that this contract could only be made upon a loan of money; for, as a loan, it may consist, according to the Roman law, of all those things quæ pondere, numero, et mensura constant, et quæ usu consumuntur (a). In practice, however, such loans are scarcely ever made but in money (b). Emerigon, indeed, mentions an instance of a loan of six dozen of Morocco skins, which were lent on respondentia, and a security given for the sum at which they were valued, with marine interest at cent. per cent. (c).

The principle upon which marine interest is allowable.

Bottomry, as has been already observed, differs from a simple loan in this, that, in the latter, the borrower takes the risk upon himself, and must repay the money at all events; whereas the lender on bottomry takes on himself the risk arising from the dangers of the sea, and is only to be repaid in the event of a safe arrival. He may therefore legally stipulate that, in the event of a safe arrival, he shall be paid, beside the sum lent, not only a compensation for the use of his money, but also the price of the risk. And as it is impossible to fix any rule by which this can be precisely ascertained, it must in all cases be settled by the agreement of the parties (d). Trajectitia pecunia, propter periculum creditoris; quamdiu navigat navis infinitas usuras recipere potest (e). Justinian, however, after prohibiting the centesima (which was one per cent. per month, or twelve per cent. per annum), in ordinary cases, permitted it in this contract, and forbid any higher interest (a).—Such a rule might have been proper in a country where navigation was confined to mere coasting voyages, and where the principal difference between the risk of one voyage and of another consisted in the time in which each might be performed. But, in modern times, when commerce is carried on between countries the most remote from each other, it would be impossible to fix any precise standard by which the rate of marine interest could be properly regulated.

(a) ff. l. 2. de reb. cred. § 1. — (b) Potbier, h. t. n. 8.

— (c) Emerig. t. 2, p. 412. — (d) Vid. Potbier, h. t. n. 2.

(e) Paul. sent. 3, 11, 14.

The marine interest, therefore, however high or exorbitant it may seem, cannot be deemed usury, provided the money lent be bonâ fide put in risk. Several attempts, however, have been made to call in question the legality of such contracts; but, in every instance, the courts, both of law and equity, have held that if the principal be bonâ fide put in risk, the contract is legal, however high the marine interest reserved may be (b).—If, indeed, the form of a bottomry or respondentia loan be used as a cloak to an usurious contract, there can be no doubt, but that it would be illegal and void.

It is of the essence of this contract that the sum lent be put in risk; and it does not, in truth, become a bottomry or respondentia contract, till the risk commences. Therefore, by the Roman law, if the borrower had spent the money on shore, and did not expose it to the perils of the sea, it was not deemed bottomry, but only a simple loan at common interest (c). And, by the general law of merchants, at this day, the contract of bottomry, like that of insurance, is merely executory, till the risk has been commenced; and the borrower, like the insured, may, at his pleasure, by giving up the voyage proposed,

Legality of it.

It is only due where the risk has been commenced.

If the risk be not commenced, the contract will become a simple loan; even though the borrower covenant to perform the voyage.

(a) Cod. lib. 4, tit. 32, de usur. 26. — (b) R. Sharpley v. Hurrell, Cro. J. 28; Per Dodderidge, J. in Roberts v. Trenayne, Cro. J. 508; R. in Joy v. Kent, Hard. 418; R. in Soome v. Gleen, 1 Sid. 27, 1 Lev. 54; Vid. Dandy v. Turner, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 372; R. De Guilder v. Deprister, 1 Vern. 236; R. Anon. 2 Ch. Ca. 30. — (c) J. de naut. fen. 1.

or by not shipping the goods on which the money was lent, prevent its ever taking effect. For, however it may have happened, that the risk was never commenced, it is sufficient that it has happened, to turn the contract into a simple loan, at common interest. The marine interest can only be due in respect of the principal having been actually put in risk; nothing else can give the lender a legal claim to it. And this is so, even where the borrower covenants to perform the voyage mentioned in the contract within a limited time (a).

De Gelder v.
De Feijter,
1 Vern. 263.

Therefore, where the borrower was bound, in consideration of 400 l. the sum lent, to perform the voyage mentioned in the bond, within six months; and also, at the expiration of that time, to pay the 400 l. and 40 l. premium, in case the vessel arrived safe; and it happened that the ship never sailed on the voyage, whereby the bond became forfeited.—The borrower brought his bill in equity to be relieved; and it was there decreed, that, as there had been no hazard of losing the principal, the lender must give up the premium, and be content with his principal and ordinary interest.

What allowance ought to be made to the lender, where the risk has not been commenced.

To the simple interest payable, in such cases, on the sum borrowed, Valin (b), by analogy to the practice in cases of insurance, holds that one half per cent. upon the marine interest, ought to be paid by the borrower who has failed in the contract, in case the lender has insured his principal.—Emerigon (c) approves of this; but adds, that if the borrower be not in fault, it will be sufficient to repay the sum lent, with the ordinary interest. To me it seems but reasonable that the lender should, in every such case, receive not only his principal and interest, but also one half per cent. upon the marine interest, and all charges of insurance.

When the risk ceases, the marine interest ceases.

In general, as soon as the risk ceases, (discusso periculo) either by the ship's safe arrival, the expiration of the term, or any other event, the marine interest ceases, and the debt becomes absolute. From that time, if the borrower delay payment, it bears only ordinary interest (a).

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 38, 39; Valin on art. 15, h. t.; Emerigon, t. 2, n. 494.—(b) On art. 15, h. t.—(c) Tom. 2, p. 496.

If the contract be for a certain number of months, either at a specific sum, or at so much per month, and so at that rate, for any longer time, not exceeding a fixed period; and the voyage be performed within the period first limited, the marine interest for the whole of that period, will nevertheless be due: But if it exceed the latter period, the risk of the lender will cease, and the debt become absolute, though the voyage should not be ended. Post diem præstitutam, et conditionem impletam, periculum esse creditoris desinet (b).

And this holds, even where the ship has been prevented by inevitable accident from performing her voyage within the time limited.—As where money was lent on bottomry, with a condition that if the ship, which was bound to the East Indies, should return to London within 36 months, or if she should not return within that time, and should not be taken or lost within that time, the money to be paid, &c. The ship was detained at Surat in India, by an embargo laid by the Mogul, till after the 36 months were elapsed, and in her return home was taken; so that the bond was forfeited. But there being no fault in the master, and the voyage being thus delayed by inevitable accident, the borrower brought his bill to be relieved against the penalty of the bond.—But Lord Harcourt, Ch. said,—“I cannot relieve in this case, against the express agreement of the parties.—If the lender has insured this money upon the ship, the borrower shall have the benefit of the insurance, upon allowing the lender the charges of the insurance, and paying him the money in three months.”

Emerigon puts a case, where it is stipulated that 12 per cent. shall be paid for the first six months; and that this shall be payable, though the ship should be afterwards lost. And he seems to be of opinion that, if the ship be lost

When the time of the risk is limited, the risk and the marine interest will end with the time, though the voyage be not ended.

Ingledew v. Foster, 4 Vin. Ab. 281.

And the risk of the lender will cease, though the ship was prevented by accident from performing her voyage within the time limited.

If the marine interest be agreed to be paid for the first six months, though the ship should be lost; whether this be a legal contract.

(a) ff. de naut. fan. 4.—(b) ff. ut sup.

after the six months, the lender is not entitled to the six months' interest.—He says, that if the borrower had remitted the interest for the first six months, the lender might fairly receive it; but that, if he should not, from the profits of his trade, have been enabled to do this, he would be discharged from all obligation (a).—This distinction is founded on principles much too vague and indefinite to be received as law. With us, the contract would not be usurious, because the sum lent would be put in hazard; and being legal, it would be binding upon the borrower, whatever might be the ultimate success of the adventure. In such a case, the first six months would be considered as a distinct risk.

Common interest begins to run on the principal, as soon as the risk ends.

If, when the sea-risk is ended, the borrower delay payment, the common interest begins to run, ipso jure, without any demand. Discussio periculo majus legitimâ usurâ non debetur (b). But this interest runs only on the principal, not on the marine interest; for this would be interest upon interest: Accessio accessionis non est (c).

(a) Emerig. t. 2, p. 518.—(b) ff. de naut. fan. 4.—(c) Pothier, h. t. n. 51: Emerig. t. 2, p. 414.

CHAP. V.

Of the Perils or Risks to which the Lender is liable.

IT is essential to this contract, not only that the money be lent on a ship or goods, but likewise that these be exposed to the perils of the sea, at the risk of the lender; that is, that the repayment of the sum lent, and the marine interest, shall depend on the safe arrival of the ship or goods (a). The perils of the sea, in a large sense, comprehend all those accidents and misfortunes, to which ships at sea are exposed, and which no human foresight or precaution can avert or resist; Vis divina, quæ præcaveri, & cui resisti, non potest. This idea seems to be very fully expressed in the usual terms of our bottomry and respondentia contracts; by which it is provided that, 'if, in the course of the voyage, and within the time prescribed, an utter loss of the ship, by fire, enemies, men of war, or any other casualties, shall unavoidably happen,' the bond shall be void, and the borrower discharged. So that the perils to which the lender is exposed, are nearly the same as those to which the underwriters upon a policy of insurance are liable (b).

Though a loss by pirates is not usually expressed in bottomry or respondentia securities; yet this is a risk within the meaning of the words; piracy being one of the casualties to which ships at sea are liable (c).

It is essential to this contract that the lender run the sea-risk.

The perils are nearly the same as in insurance.

A loss by pirates is within the contract.

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 16, 38.—(b) Vid. Le Guidon, ch. 18, art. 2. Valin on art. 11, h. t. and on art. 6, tit. des assurances; Pothier, h. t. n. 16. Vid. sup. 487.—(c) R. in Barton v. Wollisford, Comb. 56. But this was not a question upon a bottomry contract, as has been supposed. Park 421. It arose in an action on a bill of lading, to which the defendant pleaded piracy; and upon demurrer to this plea, it was contended, that robbery is no more an excuse to a master of a ship than to a common carrier: But the court held that piracy was an excuse in this case, being one of the dangers of the seas.

Nothing short of a total loss will discharge the borrower.

But whatever may be the perils to which the lender is liable,—nothing short of a total loss will discharge the borrower. The obligation remains, however the goods may be damaged by the perils of the sea. Nor is there any deduction on account of such damage; for the lender is not bound to contribute to simple average or particular damage, unless by express agreement. In this respect, the lender on bottomry is in a better situation than an insurer, who is obliged to indemnify the insured, to the extent of the sum insured, from all damage arising from any of the perils insured against. A capture, therefore, to have the effect of discharging the borrower, must be such a taking and detention as would amount to a total loss in a case of insurance: A mere temporary detention will not discharge the borrower, unless the voyage be thereby lost.

Jos. v. H. H. B. R. Mich. 23 C. III. MS.

A ship is captured and detained for a month, recaptured and carried to a port out of the course of the voyage, restored on payment of salvage, and at last arrives at her port of destination: The borrower is not discharged.

Thus:—An action was brought on a bottomry bond, on a voyage from the Tagus to New York; and the condition of the bond was, that if, upon the ship's arrival at New York, the defendant should pay the plaintiff the sum lent, with the stipulated interest; or if the ship should be lost, taken by the enemy, miscarry, or be cast away, the bond to be void, otherwise to remain in force.—The defendant pleaded, 1st, Non est factum; 2dly, that the ship did not arrive safe at New York; 3dly, that the ship was captured by the enemy.—Issue was joined upon the two first pleas; and to the third the plaintiff replied recapture. Issue being joined on this replication, it appeared upon the trial, that the ship was taken on her passage to New York, detained for a month, and plundered of her stores; that she was then retaken by an English privateer, and carried into Halifax; where the court of admiralty decreed that she should be restored to the original owners, on payment of salvage, which was raised by sale of part of the cargo; that after a considerable repair there, she sailed for New York, where she arrived with the remainder of her cargo, and earned her freight: That the ship and freight were then worth the sum mentioned in the bond; but not worth that sum,

sum, and the sum laid out in repairs.—There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and the court, upon a motion for a new trial, determined that the verdict was right, and the plaintiff entitled to recover.—Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court, said ;—“ It is clear that, by the law of England, upon a bottomry contract, there is neither average nor salvage. It has been contended on the part of the defendant, that this case is within the saving words, that in case of loss by capture, the bond should be void ; and that here was a capture and detention for a month. But, upon consideration, we are all of opinion, that a taking, within this condition, does not mean a temporary taking, which is only an obstruction which may last for a day, it must be such a taking as, between insurer and insured, would amount to a total loss. But this was not such a capture. The voyage was not lost ; for the ship arrived at her port of destination and earned her freight : And, as freight depends on the safety of the ship, she must have arrived safe to have earned her freight. Either way there must be a hardship ; but the law allows no average or salvage in bottomry bonds.”

No loss will have the effect of avoiding the contract, or discharging the borrower, but a total loss proceeding from the perils of the sea, during the voyage, and within the time specified in the contract. Creditor subit periculum navigationis in casibus fortuitis tantum (a). But no loss shall be reputed to have arisen from the perils of the sea, which arose from the internal defect of the thing hypothecated. As where a ship is not sea-worthy, and perishes from age, rottenness, or other such cause ; or where goods perish of themselves, liquors run out through the defect of the casks ; dry goods heat and ferment by length of time (b), &c. Valin (c) seems to condemn,

The lender is not liable for loss proceeding from the internal defect of the thing, unless by express stipulation.

(a) Roccus de navib. n. 51 — (b) Ord de la mer. h. t. art. 12 Emérig. t. 2, p. 509. Pothier, h. t. n. 34.— (c) On art. 12, h. t.

as illegal, any clause by which the lender is made liable for loss occasioned by the internal defect of the thing: But Emerigon (a) holds, that the lender may, by express stipulation, make himself liable for such losses, provided the cause did not exist before the ship's departure.

He is not liable for the act of the owners or master of the ship.

The act of the owners of the ship, of the master, or of the borrower, is not a peril at the risk of the lender. Quia suscipit in se periculum navigationis, suscipit periculum fortunæ, non culpæ (b). As if the voyage be changed by order of the owners of the ship; or if a loss happen by the barratry of the master, or by the misconduct of the merchant; this will not discharge the borrower. Si infortunium vel naufragium, ex culpa debitoris processerit, tunc creditor non tenetur de periculo et damno in quod incurritur, ex culpa vehentis aut alterius (c). This is the general rule; but, by express stipulation, the lender may be made liable for every loss not occasioned by the act of the borrower (d).

Nor for a loss by smuggling, unless he was privy to it.

If the ship be forfeited, or the goods confiscated, for smuggling, in which the lender had no concern, he is not liable for the loss; for this does not arise from the perils of the sea, but from the impatient avarice and lawless temerity of the borrower. Non ex marinæ tempestatis discrimine, sed ex præcipiti avaritiâ, et incivili debitoris audaciâ (e).—Yet it is said, that if the lender were privy, and consenting to the contraband trade in which the money was to be employed, he shall be liable for the loss. Si sciente, et consentiente illo fiat, consensus jus facit (f).—In England if the money were lent to be employed in a trade prohibited by law; the contract would be absolutely void; and the sum lent could never be recovered from the borrower, even though no loss had happened (g).

If the ship do not sail on the

The lender, like an insurer, is only answerable for losses which happen within the time and place of the risk, as specified in the contract. Therefore, if the ship, without necessity, deviate from the voyage described in the bond, the lender will not be liable, any more than an insurer, to any loss that may afterwards happen (a). Upon this point I would refer the reader to the subject of deviation, in cases of insurance (b), the doctrine of which is equally applicable to the present subject.

(a) Tom. 2, p. 509.—(b) ff. de nant. fan.—(c) Roccus de navib. n. 51.—(d) Vid. Emerig. t. 2, p. 510.—(e) ff. de naut. fan. 3.—(f) Kuricke, tit. 6, p. 762. Vid. Valin on art. 12, b. t.—(g) Vid. sup. book 1, ch. 3, § 1, 2.

Our courts, both of law and equity, have adopted the same principle in several instances.

Thus:—The plaintiff lent 500 l. upon the hull of a ship, and the defendant covenanted to pay, if the ship went from London to Bantam, and returned from thence directly to London, within 12 months, 550 l.; if from London to Bantam, and from thence to China or Formosa, and returned to London within 24 months, 650 l.; and if she returned not within 24 months, then to pay 5 l. per month above the 650 l., till 36 months; and if she returned not within 36 months, then to pay 710 l. unless it could be proved that the ship was lost within the 36 months.—The ship went from London to Bantam, and from thence to Surat and other parts, and so returned to Bantam; and in her voyage from Bantam to London, was lost within 36 months.—In an action upon the bond; after a series of long and intricate pleadings, the above facts appeared upon demurrer.—The court inclined to think, that, by reason of the deviation in going to Surat, the plaintiff was discharged from the risk, and therefore entitled to recover; and after time taken to deliberate, they adjudged accordingly (c).

So, where, to an action upon a bottomry bond, the defendant pleaded, that the ship went from London to Barbadoes, sine deviation, and afterwards, on her return from Barbadoes towards London, she was lost in vingo voyage described, or deviate without necessity, the lender will be discharged from the risk.

Wells v. Wildy,
Stin. 152.

A ship is lost after a wilful deviation, the lender is not liable.

Williams v. Steedman, Skin. 345; Holt's Rep. 126. S. C.

If the ship be pressed into the King's service, this will excuse a deviation; but if the borrower allege a deviation, this must be explicitly denied.

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 18. Emerig. t. 2. p. 522.—
(b) Sup. 183.—(c) Vid. Anon. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 372. 2 Ch. Ca. 130.

predicto. The plaintiff replied, that the ship, in her return, went from Barbadoes to Jamaica; and that after a stay there, she sailed from Jamaica for London, and was lost; and so shews a deviation: The defendant rejoined, that she was pressed into the King's service, and so was compelled to go to Jamaica, which is the deviation pleaded by the plaintiff; absque hoc, that she deviated after she was pressed. Upon demurrer to this rejoinder, the plaintiff had judgment.—The court held that the plea of the defendant was not good; for he alleged that the ship went from London to Barbadoes, without deviation, and that, in her return from Barbadoes to London, she was lost in the voyage aforesaid; but did not shew, without deviation. And as the condition was so in express words, the defendant ought to have shewn expressly that he had performed it according to the words.

Changing the ship without necessity, discharges the lender.

So where money is lent on goods, on board a certain ship, the lender is only considered as liable for the risk on those goods while they are on board that ship; and if they be removed to another ship, without necessity, the lender will be discharged (a).—But if the change be occasioned by any necessity, he will still continue liable. As if the first ship be pressed into the king's service, or be declared unnavigable, &c.; the borrower may load the goods on board another vessel at the risk of the lender, and the increase of freight, &c. will be a general average, to which the lender will be liable (b).

Duration of the risk.

Money is generally lent for the whole voyage outward and homeward; or for either separately; or for a limited time. The contract usually specifies the commencement and end of the risk; and any misfortune happening before or after, is at the risk of the borrower (c). If the voyage be described in the bond; but the time of the commencement and end of the risk be not specified, the risk, as to the ship, shall commence from the time she sets sail, and continue till she anchors in safety at her port of destination; and, as to goods, from the time they are shipped, till they are safely landed (a).

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 18; Emerig. t. 2, p. 524.—(b) Emerig. ut sup. Vid. sup. book 1. ch. 5, § 2.—(c) Vid. Valin, on art. 13, h. t. Emerig. t. 2, p. 514.

When the loan upon goods is both for the outward and homeward voyages, the lender continues liable to the risk during the homeward voyage on the goods, by which those have been replaced on which the money was lent (b).

(a) Vid. sup. book 1, ch. 7, § 5.—(b) Pothier, h. t. n. 34.

CHAP. VI.

Whether the Lender be liable to general Average.

By the general law of merchants, the lender is liable to general average.

THERE is this difference between insurance and bottomry, that an insurer, unless he stipulate to be free of particular average, is always liable to that charge; whereas a lender is not liable to it, unless by express stipulation: But, by the general law of merchants, in case of gross or general average, the lender shall contribute to discharge the borrower (a): The reason of this difference is, that particular average in no degree contributes to the safety of the ship; whereas it is to those sacrifices which are the subject of general average, that the lender owes the preservation of his money, which, without such sacrifices, would be lost with the ship (b).

The nature of the contract seems to require this.

Foreign writers even hold that a stipulation on the part of the lender, to be free of general average, would be absolutely void, as being inconsistent with the nature of the contract, contrary to good policy, and injurious to the interests of the lender himself, who must lose all, if the ship be lost (c). Indeed the nature and object of bottomry contracts, seem, of themselves, to require that the lender shall be liable for general average. The borrower generally takes up the money because he has not a capital of his own upon which he can carry on his trade. Knowing that it would be impossible for him to repay the sum borrowed, but in the event of a fortunate return, he means to run no risk, and agrees to part with a large share of his profits, to be free from all personal responsibility. But if he should be held liable to general average, then, by taking up money in this way, he must engage in a game of hazard, perhaps without being aware of his danger, in which he may eventually be ruined.

(a) ' L'argent à profit n'est contribuable en aucune avarie, & réservé qu'aux rachats, compositions, et jets faits pour la salvation du total, et pour le soulagement ou l'évasion, des dangers.' Le Guidon, ch 19, art. 5.—' Ce qui est fort juste,' says Cleirac, in his commentary on this passage, ' afin que cette grosse usure passe au paroisse, Pensatio vel æquamentum periculi, comme dit Du Moulin, sur la loi, periculi pretium. Dig. de nautico fænore, en son traité, Contract. usur. quest. 3. de trajectitiis. L'argent a profit ne charge pas le navire mais l'affecte par hypothèque, laquelle ne subsiste que par la salvation d'icelui; c'est pour quoy il est raisonnable que la dite hypothèque contribue à ce qui concerne la conservation du total, ou de son sujet, Ut omnium in tributione faciatur quod pro omnibus datum est.' Vid. Pothier, h. t. n. 42, 47.—(b) Emerig. t. 2, p. 505.—(c) Consult on this point Valin, on art. 16, h. t. ; Pothier, n. 46; Emerig. t. 2, p. 505.

It has been said, however, by a very distinguished judge, that, "by the law of England, there is neither average nor salvage upon bottomry contracts (a)" And this doctrine, so far as it relates to average, has been since adopted by another noble person, no less eminent for his learning and abilities (b). I have anxiously sought, however, but sought in vain, to find any decided case, or authority in the law, which could warrant this doctrine.—I cannot agree with a learned writer (c) on this subject, that the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, § 5 (d), which provides that the benefit of salvage shall be allowed to the lender, on East India voyages conclusively proves that there was neither average nor salvage upon bottomry contracts at common law.—I never could look upon that act as having introduced any new principle into the law either of insurance or bottomry contracts. On the contrary, it seems to me, after the best consideration I have been able to give the subject, that it merely restored them to their original and only proper use, from which a spirit of gaming had been suffered to pervert them. I cannot even admit that, because the statute gives the benefit of salvage to the lender upon East India voyages, therefore he was not entitled to this at common law. As well might it be said, that because the insurance of enemy's property, in time of war,

Whether by the law of England.

(a) Per Lord Mansfield, in Joyce v. Williamson, sup. 754.—

(b) Per Lord Kenyon at N. P. in Walpole v. Ewer, inf. 762.—

(c) Park, 423.—(d) Sup. 128.

has been occasionally prohibited by statute, therefore the insurance of enemy's property is a legal contract at common law (a).—But even admitting the inference, that because the statute gives the benefit of salvage to the lender upon East India voyages, therefore he was not entitled to this at common law; does it from thence follow that he was not liable to general average at common law? The statute no where mentions general average.

If the insured upon a respondentia interest on a foreign ship be obliged to contribute to a general average, the underwriters will be liable.

But whatever may be the true rule of law which ought to prevail on this subject, it has been determined, that if an insurance be made in England upon a respondentia interest upon a foreign ship, and it appear that the lender is liable by the law of the country to which the ship belongs, to contribute to a general average; the underwriters upon the policy will be liable for such contribution.

Walpole v. Fowler,
at N. P. after Tr.
1789.

Thus:—Where a respondentia loan on a Danish ship and goods was insured in England, and an average loss was sustained upon the goods to the amount of 6 l. 15 s. per cent. to which the holder of the respondentia bond was obliged to contribute. He brought his action against the English underwriters to recover the amount of this contribution.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, said,—“By the law of England, a lender upon respondentia is not liable to average losses; but is entitled to receive the whole sum advanced, provided the ship and cargo arrive at the port of destination. The plaintiff contends that as, by the law of Denmark, such lenders are bound to contribute to average losses, according to the amount of their interest, the insurer here must answer to them. The Danish consul has proved that he received a judgment of the court of Copenhagen, the decretal part of which proves the law of Denmark to be as the plaintiff has stated it. The opinions of several men of eminence in that country have been offered on each side: But I reject them, because the solemn decision of a court of competent jurisdiction is of much greater weight than the

The decision of a foreign court of competent jurisdiction is the best evidence to shew what the law of the country is.

(a) See this subject fully considered, sup. book 1, ch. 2, § 1. opinions opinions of advocates, however eminent, or even the extrajudicial opinions of the most able judges. It seems as if, in this case, the underwriters were bound by the law of the country, to which the contract relates."—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff (a).

(a) Vid. the case of Newman v. Cazalet, Beques lex merc. 349, where an insured had been obliged by the judgment of a foreign court to pay a larger average contribution than by the law of England could have been demanded, but it appeared to have been customary in adjusting losses to allow the whole of such contributions; Mr. Justice Buller at N. P. ruled that if the usage were clearly proved, it ought to govern.

C H A P. VII.

Whether the Lender be entitled to the Benefit of Salvage.

The stat. 19 G. 2. c. 37, gives the benefit of salvage to lenders on East India voyages.

THE provision of the stat. 19 G. II. c. 37, which gives the benefit of salvage to lenders on bottomry and respondentia, being confined to East India voyages, it may be proper here to enquire, whether, before that act, the lender, upon any voyage, was entitled to the benefit of salvage.

Whether the lender on other voyages be entitled to the same benefit.

By the general law of merchants, the event upon which the borrower is discharged, is the total loss of the ship or goods upon which the money is lent; provided this happen by the perils mentioned in the contract. Though the borrower is bound to pay the sum lent and the marine interest, in case the ship or goods on which the money is lent arrive at the port of destination, however damaged or reduced in value by the perils of the sea; yet if part should be captured or lost, the borrower is only bound to pay in proportion to what remains (a).—Thus, if 1000 l. be lent on goods, the half of which are lost, the rest saved, the lender will lose 500 l. of his principal, and the borrower will pay the remaining 500 l. with the marine interest upon that sum. If the ship be lost, but the goods, on which the money was lent are all saved, the contract will remain in force, and the borrower will be liable, provided another ship can be procured to convey the goods to the place of their destination. But the charge of the other vessel will be at the expence of the lender, and if no other can be procured, the borrower will be discharged on accounting to the lender for the proceeds of the goods saved.

(a) Pothier, h. t. n. 47.; Valin, art. 11, 14, 17, h. t. Emerig. t. 2, p. 453. Consult on this point Bynk. quest. jur. priv. lib. 3, c. 16.

But, by the law of England, according to the opinions of Lord Mansfield and Lord Kenyon, which we have already had occasion to refer to (a), there is neither average nor salvage upon bottomry contracts: It must be admitted, however, that, without the benefit of salvage, this contract must partake greatly of the nature of a wager, even when the money is lent upon goods on board of equal value. If there be a total loss of the ship the lender loses all, though all the goods are saved.

Lord Mansfield's opinion against it.

(a) Sup. 761.

As to the insurance of bottomry and respondentia loans,
vid. sup. 117, 317.

As to the remedy of the lender, where the borrower becomes bankrupt, before the risk is ended, and the lender entitled to repayment, vid. sup. 731.

END OF THE SECOND BOOK.

BOOK THE THIRD.

Of Insurance upon Lives.

The subject of this book may be distributed under the following heads;

- I. Of the Nature of this Contract.
- II. Of the Warranty of the Age and Health of the Life insured.
- III. Of the Interest of the insured.
- IV. Of the Risks.

C H A P. I.

Of the Nature of this Contract.

Defined.

THE insurance of a life is a contract whereby the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium, either in a gross sum, or periodical payments, undertakes to pay the person for whose benefit the insurance is made, a stipulated sum, or an annuity equivalent, upon the death of the person whose life is insured, whenever this shall happen, if the insurance be for the whole life, or, in case this shall happen within a certain period, if the insurance be for a limited time.

Utility of it.

The precarious dependence of a numerous family upon the life of a single person, naturally suggests the idea of seeking some protection against a calamity, which sooner or later must befall them; and this, probably, suggested the first idea of insurances upon lives, as an expedient by which a pecuniary indemnity, at least, might be secured to the sufferers sufficient to rescue them from the poverty and distress which otherwise awaited them.

Upon this principle rests the utility of insurances upon lives. Persons having incomes determinable upon their own lives, or the lives of others, arising from landed property, from professions, from church livings, from public public employments, pensions, annuities, &c. by paying such an annual premium as they can spare from their present necessities, may secure to their widows, their children, or other dependants, an adequate sum of money, or an equivalent annuity, payable upon their deaths. By such insurances, also, may the fines to be paid upon the renewal of leases, or upon the descent of copyholds, be provided for. So, where a person, having only a life income, wants to borrow money, but can only give his own personal security for it; he may, by insuring his life, secure to the lender the repayment of his money, though he should die before he is enabled to discharge the debt (a).

These considerations induced the bishop of Oxford and several other benevolent persons in the reign of Queen Ann, to apply for the charter by which the corporation, called the Amicable Society, was established; to enable persons to subscribe a part of their incomes, in order that the representative of each subscriber should, upon his death, receive such a sum as the funds of the corporation would enable them to pay, upon the several deaths happening in each year.

But as the benefits of this society were confined to a limited number of subscribers, and those only for small sums, several other corporations and companies upon more extensive plans have been established.—The Royal Exchange and London Assurance companies obtained charters from king George I. to enable them to make insurances upon lives. The Society for Equitable Assurances on lives and survivorships, was established in the year 1762, by deed enrolled in the court of King's Bench at Westminster, in which every person who insures becomes a member, participating in the profit and loss of the society. The success attending this establishment has given rise to many other institutions of the same nature, in the country as well as in the metropolis; but all greatly inferior to

Establishment of the different companies for the insurance of lives.

Amicable Society

Royal Exchange and London As- surance companies.

Equitable Assurance.

(a) Vid. inf. ch. 3.

the Equitable Assurance, in the extent of their dealings, and the magnitude of their funds.

Legality of insurance on lives.

We are not informed at what time this species of insurance was first introduced into this country; probably because it came into use by slow and imperceptible degrees. Roccus (a) has taken some pains to prove that insurances upon lives are legal contracts. Yet in most of the states of Europe such insurances have been prohibited by positive law. In this country, however, such contracts have been repeatedly sanctioned by legislative authority, and indeed the legality of them is now indisputable. Perhaps it might favour too much of national partiality to assert that in this country alone can insurances upon lives be safely tolerated. In France, they have always been deemed illegal (b), and they are expressly prohibited by the ordinance of 1681 (c), because, say the French writers, it is an offence against public decency to set a price upon the life of a man, particularly the life of a free-man, which is above all valuation (d); thus glossing over, with a fine sentiment, a motive of policy which could not be mentioned without conveying an insinuation to the discredit of the national character.

(a) De assur. n. 74.—(b) Le Guidon, ch. 16, art. 5.—(c) Tit. des assurances, art. 10.—(d) Valin, on art. 10. tit. des assurances. Vid. sup. 215; Pothier, tit. des assurances, n. 127.

C H A P. II.

Of the Warranty of the Age and Health of the Life insured.

IT is generally a condition, or warranty, in an insurance upon a life, either inserted in the policy, or contained in a declaration or agreement signed by the insured, that the person whose life is meant to be insured has not any disorder which tends to the shortening of life; that he has, or has not, had the small pox; and that his age does not exceed a certain period; that this declaration shall be the basis of the contract between the insurers and the insured; and that if any untrue averment be contained therein, the contract shall be void, and all money paid on account of the insurance forfeited.

The declaration signed by the insured.

As this declaration is to be taken as part of the written contract (a), amounting to a warranty, it behoves every person who makes an insurance upon a life, to be very circumspect in ascertaining the truth of the allegations contained in it; because upon that the validity of the contract must depend.

By the warranty that the person, whose life is to be insured, 'has no disorder which tends to the shortening of life,' is not to be understood that he is perfectly free from the seeds of all disorder. The warranty is sufficiently true if he be in a reasonably good state of health, and, that his life may be insured on the common terms, for a person of his age and condition: And the following case will shew, that though he labours under a particular infirmity, yet, if it can be shewn that this had no

A warranty that the party is in good health will not be falsified by proving that he laboured under a particular infirmity; if this had no tendency to shorten life.

(a) See the case of Routledge v. Burrell, inf. book 4, c. 4.

tendency to shorten life, and that, in fact, it did not, in any degree, contribute to his death, the warranty is sufficiently true.

Rofs v. Bradshaw, 1 Pl. 312.

The life insured is warranted in good health at the time of making the policy;—It will not falsify this warranty, that, in consequence of a wound, he had a partial palsy in his loins; if this did not tend to shorten life.

Thus:—An insurance was made on the life of Sir James Rofs for one year from October 1759 to October 1760; warranted in good health at the time of making the policy.—In an action on this policy, it appeared upon the trial, that Sir James had received a wound at the battle of La Feldt, in the year 1747, in his loins, which had occasioned a partial relaxation or palsy, so that he could not retain his urine or feces, and which was not mentioned to the insurer. Sir James died of a malignant fever within the time of the insurance. All the physicians and surgeons who were examined for the plaintiff, swore that the wound had no sort of connexion with the fever; and that the want of retention was not a disorder which shortened life; but he might, notwithstanding that, have lived to the common age of man; and the surgeons who opened him said that his intestines were all sound. One physician, who was examined for the defendant said, that the want of retention was paralytic; but being asked to explain, he said it was only a local palsy, arising from the wound, but did not affect life: But, on the whole, he did not look upon him as a good life.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, in summing up the evidence to the jury, said;—"No question of fraud can exist in this case. When a man makes an insurance upon a life generally, without any warranty of the state of the life insured, the insurers take all the risk, unless some fraud be committed by the person insuring, either by suppressing some circumstances, which he knew, or by alleging what was false." But if the insured knew no more than the insurer, the latter takes the risk. Wherever there is a warranty, it must, at all events, be proved that the party was which makes the question on a warranty than on fraud. Here there was a warranty is proved that there was no representation of the state of the life, nor any question asked about about it: Nor was it necessary. Where an insurance is upon a representation, every material circumstance should be mentioned; such as age, way of life, &c. But where there is a warranty, then, nothing need be told; but it must, in general, be proved, if litigated, that the life was, in fact, a good one: And so it may be, though he had a particular infirmity. The only question is, whether he was in a reasonably good state of health, and 'such a life as ought to be insured on common terms.'—The jury, upon this direction, without going out of court, found a verdict for the plaintiff.

So, where an insurance was made on the life of Sir Simeon Stuart, from the 1st of April 1779, to the 1st of April 1780, and during the life of Eliza Edgley Ewer. The policy contained a warranty that Sir Simeon was about 57 years of age, and in good health when the policy was underwritten, and that Mrs. Ewer was about 78 years of age. Two questions were intended to have been made; 1st. As to the plaintiff's interest; 2dly. On the warranty of health. The former was disposed of by the plaintiff's proving a judgment debt.—As to the latter, it appeared in evidence that though Sir Simeon was troubled with spasms and cramps, from violent fits of the gout, he was in as good a state of health when that policy was underwritten, as he had enjoyed for a long time before. It was also proved by the broker who effected the policy, that the underwriters were told that Sir Simeon was subject to the gout.—Doctor Heberdin, and other gentlemen of the faculty proved that spasms and convulsions were symptoms incident to the gout—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, said;—"The imperfection of language is such, that we have not words for every different idea; and the real intention of the parties must be found out by the subject matter. By the present policy, the life, is warranted, to some of the underwriters in health; to others, in good health; and yet there was no difference, in point of fact: Such a warranty can never mean, that a man has not in him the seeds of some disorder. We

Willis v. Poo's,
at N. P. after Eust 1780.

Nor will it falsify this warranty to shew that the party was troubled with spasms and cramps, from violent fits of the gout.

are all born with the seeds of mortality in us. A man, subject to the gout, is a life capable of being insured (a), if he has no sickness at the time, to make it an unequal contract."—There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

If there be no warranty, the insurer takes the risk upon himself.

Stackpole v. Simon, at N. P. Hil. Vac. 1779. Park. 437.

The insured refuses to warrant, but the broker tells the first underwriter, that, from the account he had received, he believed it to be a good life.—There being no fraud in this, the underwriters run all risks.

Every subsequent underwriter may give in evidence any representation made to the first.

When there is no warranty the insurer takes the risk upon himself, whatever may be the state of health of the person whose life is insured, unless there be some fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment.

Thus:—An insurance was made on the life of Drury Sheppey, from the 1st of April 1777, to the 1st of April 1778.—In an action on the policy, the question was, as to the representation of Sheppey's health, at the time the policy was effected. The interest in the life was a debt of 900*l.* due from Sheppey to the plaintiff. It appeared that Sheppey, who had a place in the custom house of Ireland, went to the south of France, for the benefit of his health, or to avoid his creditors, and there died within the time limited in the policy. The broker who effected the policy, told the underwriters, that the gentleman for whom he acted would not warrant any thing; but from the account he (the broker) had received, he believed it to be a good life.—Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, said;—"As to the interest, this policy may be considered as a collateral security for the debt due to the plaintiff. When there is no warranty, the underwriter runs the risk of its being a good life or not. If there be a concealment of any knowledge of the state of the life, it is a fraud. It is a rule that every subsequent underwriter gives credit to the representation made to the first (b); and it is allowed that any subsequent underwriter may give in evidence a misrepresentation to the first. The broker here does not pretend to any knowledge of his own, but speaks from information (a). There is no fraud in him.—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

(a) It is now a practice, in most of the offices for insurances upon lives, to require that, in the proposal for every insurance, it shall be stated, whether the person, whose life is to be insured, has ever been afflicted with the gout.—(b) Vid. sup. b. 1, c. 10, § 1.

(a) It is not stated, in the above note, from what information he spoke; but if it had appeared that he spoke without any information on the subject, this, I conceive would have been a misrepresentation that would have avoided the contract. Vid. sup. . b. 1, c. 10, § 1.

C H A P. III.

Of the Interest of the Insured in the Life insured.

Necessity of prohibiting insurances upon lives, without interest.

THE spirit or gaming, which is always ready to insinuate itself into every transaction, and to assume the form of every contract, which depends upon uncertain events, long since availed itself of insurance upon lives, as affording abundant opportunities for speculating upon chances. Wagers came to be daily made upon the duration of men's lives, in the form of insurances, by persons who were neither connected with the parties, nor in any manner interested in the duration of their lives; nor did the insurers much concern themselves to know upon what interest, or for what reason, such insurances were made. Such practices were big with mischiefs of various descriptions; nor is it probable that even the lives, thus presumptuously insured, were always free from danger. The evil, however, at length became apparent to the legislature: But it being admitted, that insurances upon lives, under proper restrictions, might, in many instances, be highly beneficial to the public, it was determined, that such insurances ought not to be abolished, but only regulated.

By 14 G. III., c. 48, any insurance made on any life, or other event, wherein the insured shall have no interest, shall be void.

Therefore, by stat. 14 G. III. c. 48, § 1., it is enacted, 'That no insurance shall be made by any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, on the life or lives of any person or persons, or on any other event or events whatsoever (a), wherein the person or persons, for whose

(a) The title of this statute is, 'An act for regulating insurances upon lives, and for prohibiting all such insurances, except in cases where the persons insuring shall have an interest

‘ whose use or benefit, or on whose account, such policy or policies shall be made, shall have no interest, or by way of gaming or wagering: And that every insurance made contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.’

And (by § 2), it is further enacted, ‘ That it shall not be lawful to make any policy or policies on the life or lives of any person or persons or other event or events; without inserting in such policy or policies, the name or names of the person or persons interested therein, or for what use, benefit, or on whose account, such policy is so made or underwrote.’

And the name of the person interested in the event shall be inserted in the policy.

And (by § 3,) it is further enacted, ‘ That in all cases, where the insured hath an interest in such life or lives, event or events, no greater sum shall be recovered, or received from the insurer or insurers, than the amount or value of the interest of the insured in such life or lives, or other event or events.

And the insured shall recover no more than the amount or value of his interest.

The fourth section contains a proviso that this act shall not extend to insurances bonâ fide made on ships or goods.

This act not to extend to marine insurances.

Very few questions have arisen upon the interest of the insured, in the life insured.—A bonâ fide creditor has undoubtedly an interest in the life of his debtor, at least where he has only the personal security of the debtor; and it has been holden by a great authority, that this interest is insurable within the statute.

A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor.

‘ tereft in the life or death of the persons insured.’—From this title it would seem, that the framers of this bill originally intended to confine the operation of it to insurances upon lives only. But the words, ‘ or any other event or events whatsoever, introduced not only into the enacting parts, but also into the preamble, plainly shew that the legislature meant, that the regulations of this act should extend to every species of insurance, except marine insurances; to which, by the proviso in the 4th section, it is declared that it shall not extend.—Accordingly, in the case of Roebuck v. Hammerton, Cowp. 737, the court held that a policy upon the sex of the chevalier D'Eon was a wagering policy, and void by this act.

Anderson v. Ellis,
at N. P. B. R.
Hil. 1795.
Park 430.

Thus:—An insurance was made on the life of Lord Newhaven, from the 1st of December 1792, to the 1st of December 1793.—In an action on the policy, the only question was, as to the plaintiff's interest in the life insured, which, it was contended, was not sufficient to take this case out of the above statute. It appeared in evidence, that Lord Newhaven was indebted to the plaintiff and a Mr. Mitchell, in a large sum of money; part of which debt had been assigned by them to another person; the remainder being more than the amount of the sum insured, was, upon a settlement of accounts between the plaintiff and Mitchell, agreed by them to remain to the account of Mitchell only.—Lord Kenyon, who tried the cause, was of opinion, that this debt was a sufficient interest. He said it was singular that this question had never been directly decided before; that a creditor had certainly an interest in the life of his debtor, because the means by which he was to be satisfied might materially depend upon it; and that, at all events, the death must, in all cases, in some degree, lessen the security.—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Whether this ought not to be confined to the case where, by the death of the debtor, the creditor must lose his debt.

From the above note of this case, though it seems to be a defective one, it may reasonably be supposed that the plaintiff had only Lord Newhaven's personal security for the debt, and that with him died all hopes of repayment from his estate. Upon this ground I think there could be no doubt but that the creditor had an insurable interest in Lord Newhaven's life, to the amount of the debt. But Lord Kenyon is stated to have said, that, ‘At all events, the death must, in all cases, in some degree, lessen the security.’—As an abstract proposition, this is, in general, true. But it cannot be inferred from this, that his lordship meant to lay it down as law, that every creditor, however his debt may be secured, has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, to the amount of the debt. Lord Mansfield, in the case of Stackpool v. Simon (a), says that a policy may be considered as a collateral security for the debt due to the insured.—And yet it would seem that, even where the creditor has only the personal security of the debtor to rely upon for repayment, the insurer, before he pays the sum insured, might, perhaps, have a right to call upon the insured, to shew, that nothing could be recovered from the estate of the deceased debtor. Where the debt is amply and satisfactorily secured by mortgage or otherwise, the creditor can have but the shadow of an interest in the life of the debtor. But, by the third section of the above act, it is declared, that ‘No greater sum shall be recovered from the insurer than the amount or value of the interest of the insured in the life insured.’—Now, what can be the amount or value of the interest of the creditor, in the case put?—Surely nothing that a jury could estimate.

(a) Sup. 772.

Since the former impression of this work a case has been determined in the court of King’s Bench, which strongly exemplifies and confirms this doctrine.

The plaintiffs, who were coachmakers in Long Acre, on the 29th of November 1803, effected an insurance with the Pelican life insurance company, on the life of the late Right Honourable William Pitt for 500 l. for seven years at an annual premium of 15 l. 15 s.—In an action on the policy, the plaintiffs averred that, “at the time of making the insurance, and from thence until the death of Mr. Pitt, they were interested in his life to the amount of the sum insured.”—Upon the trial it appeared that Mr. Pitt, at the time of the execution of the policy, and from thence to the time of his death, was indebted to the plaintiffs in more than 500 l. and died insolvent; and that, after his death, and before the commencement of the suit, the executors of Mr. Pitt paid to the plaintiffs, out of the money granted by parliament for the discharge of his debts, 1109 l. 11 s. 6 d. in full for the debt due to them from Mr. Pitt.—The court determined that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.—They held that this insurance, like every other to which the law gives effect, is, in its nature, a contract of indemnity, as distinguished from a wager; that the interest which the plaintiffs had in the life of Mr. Pitt was that of creditors, in a case

*Godshall & others
v. Bolero & others, 9 Eng 72.*

If after the death of a debtor whose life is insured by a creditor, and before any action brought on the policy, the debt be paid, no action will lie.

where the probability of payment depended on the continuance of his life, and the indemnity sought by the insurance was against the loss that might result from his death; that the action was therefore founded on a supposed damnification of the plaintiffs, occasioned by his death, and existing at the time of the action brought; and therefore if, before the action brought, the damages occasioned by his death were prevented by payment of his debt, the ground of the action was taken away.

The holder of a note for money won at play has not an insurable interest in the life of the maker.

No creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, unless the debt be incurred upon a good and legal consideration; and, therefore, the holder of a note given for money won at play, has not an insurable interest in the life of the maker of the note.

Dwyer v. Edie, at N. P. after Hil. 1788. Park 432.

As where a policy was effected on the life of James Russell, from the first of June 1784 to the first of June 1785.—By a memorandum at the foot of the policy it was declared, that it was intended to cover the sum of 5,000*l.* due from Russell to the plaintiff, for which he had given his note, payable in one year from the 14th of May 1784.—Two objections were made on the part of the defendant; 1st, That part of the consideration for the note, was money won at play; 2dly, That Russell, at the time he gave the note, was an infant.—Mr. Justice Buller, who tried the cause, nonsuited the plaintiff, upon the ground that part of the consideration for the note, being for a gaming transaction, there was a want of interest in the plaintiff. But as to the objection of the infancy of Russell, he said the interest was contingent; for Russell might or might not have avoided the note; and he doubted much whether, till so avoided, the note must not be taken, as against a third person, to be the note of a person of full age; and the maker of the note only could take the objection.

The infancy of the debtor cannot be objected by an insurer.

Miswell v. Angell, 151.

A trustee may insure for the benefit of the cestuy que trust.

A trustee may insure for the benefit of the cestuy que trust.—As where an insurance was made on the life of one Holden, from the 17th of August 1790, to the 17th of August 1791, and during the life of the plaintiff. Holden had granted an annuity to the plaintiff's late brother, brother, which annuity he had bequeathed to persons not parties to this insurance, having made the plaintiff executor of his will, and directed him to make insurance.

—In an action on this policy, brought by the executor, it was objected that, as the annuity was not devised to him by the grantee, he had no insurable interest in the life of Holden the grantor.—But Lord Kenyon thought this a sufficient interest in the executor to support the action.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Risks in Insurances upon Lives.

A loss, upon this contract, must always be total.

AS, by the terms of this contract, the entire sum insured is to be paid upon the happening of one single event, which cannot partially happen, and by the happening of which, the insured must suffer all the injury against which he meant to be protected by the insurance, the loss must always be total, and never can be partial.

The usual exceptions.

The different insurance companies annex to the contract certain conditions or exceptions.

The Royal Exchange Assurance declares every insurance made by a person on his own life to be void, if the person, whose life is insured, shall depart the limits of Europe, shall die upon the seas, or enter into any military or naval service whatsoever, without the previous consent of the company; or shall die by suicide, duelling, or the hand of justice.

Where the insurance is made by a person, on the life of another, death “by suicide, duelling, or the hand of justice” is not excepted.

The Westminster Society adopts the same exceptions. The Equitable Insurance, and the Pelican Insurance, adopt the same exceptions, only omitting the word duelling, even where the party insures his own life.

To make the insurer liable, not merely the cause of the death, but the death itself must appear to have happened within the time limited.

We have already seen that, in the case of marine insurances, not only the cause of the loss, but the loss itself, must appear to have happened during the continuance of the risk (a). The same principle applies to insurances upon lives. And therefore, if a man's life be insured for a year, and some short time before the expiration of the term,

(a) R. Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R. 252, sup. 263, 533.

term, he receive a mortal wound, of which he dies after the year, the insurer would not be liable (a).

But where it is uncertain whether the death happened within the time limited, this is a question of fact that must be left to the decision of a jury.

This is always a question of fact.

Thus: An insurance was made on the life of L. Maclean Esq. from the 30th of January 1772 to the 30th of January 1778. In an action on the policy it appeared, that, about the 28th of November 1777, he sailed from the Cape of Good Hope, in the Swallow sloop of war; which ship, not being afterwards heard of, was supposed to have been lost in a storm off the Western Islands.—The question was, whether Maclean died before the 30th of January 1778. To establish the affirmative of that question, the plaintiff called witnesses to prove the ship's departure from the Cape with Maclean; and several captains swore that they sailed the same day; that the Swallow must have been as forward in her course as they were on the 13th or 14th of January, the period of a most violent storm, in which she probably was lost; and that the Swallow was much smaller than their vessels, which, with difficulty, weathered the storm.—Lord Manfield, who tried the cause, left it to the jury to say, whether, under all the circumstances, they thought the evidence sufficient to convince them that Maclean died before the time limited in the policy; adding, that if they thought it so doubtful as not to be able to form an opinion, the defendant ought to have their verdict.—They found for the plaintiff.

Patterson v. Black, at N. P. Hil. Vac. 1786.

A question which has often puzzled lawyers, namely; whether a period of time, to commence from the day of the date, was inclusive or exclusive of that day, occurred in an action upon a policy upon the life of Sir Robert Howard, for one year, from the day of the date thereof, which was the 3d day of September 1697. Sir Robert died on the 3d of September 1698, at one o'clock in the

Sir Robert Howard's case, 2 Salk. 625, 1 Ld. Ray. 430.

If a policy be to take effect from the day of the date, the day of the date is excluded.

(a) Per Willes, J. in delivering the opinion of the court in Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R. 254.

morning.—Lord C. J. Holt held that, from the day of the date excludes the day; but from the date includes it; and therefore, the day of the date being excluded in this case, the insurer was held liable (a).

Reasons why so few litigated questions have arisen in insurances upon lives.

I have now gone through all that seemed to be material upon the subject of insurances upon lives; from which it appears that many of the principles which govern marine insurances are also applicable to this contract. Considering the great multiplicity of insurances which have of late years been made upon lives, the number of litigated cases that have arisen upon them is extremely small. One principal reason is, that the happening of the event insured against is always a fact of easy proof, which can scarcely ever afford any subject of dispute: Another is the great difficulty of practising any fraud in such insurances: But to no cause is this fortunate circumstance more to be ascribed than to the honour,

(a) See the case of Pugh v. the Duke of Leeds, Cowp. 714, in which, after great deliberation, it was held that the words from the date, and from the day of the date, mean the same thing; that they are taken to be either inclusive, or exclusive, according to the context, and subject matter; and that either meaning shall be adopted which shall most effectually support, not defeat, the intention of the parties.—This may be a very good rule, in the cases to which it applies: But it would have been of no use in the decision of the case above cited; because the intention of the parties, in that case, could only be collected from the policy; and whether they meant to include, or exclude, the day of the date, depended on the grammatical construction of the words contained in it. If, therefore, such a case were again to occur, it must be decided whether the day of the date should be excluded or included; and then, perhaps, Lord Holt's opinion might be thought the best authority upon that point.—Such a question, however, is not again likely to arise; because it is now the usual practice to mention the day both of the commencement and end of the policy, and to declare both to be inclusive.

integrity,

integrity, and liberality of the several companies engaged in this branch of insurance.

As to return of premium, no question upon that subject has ever yet, as far as I have been able to learn, occurred in any case of insurance upon lives. If such a question should arise, it must be governed by the same principles which prevail upon that subject in marine insurances. These will be found under the proper head in the first book (a). Indeed Lord Mansfield, on two occasions, exemplified his doctrine, upon the subject of return of premium, by shewing their application to the case of an insurance upon a life (b).

Return of premium.

With respect to the claim which the insured upon a life shall have upon the estate of an insurer become bankrupt during the continuance of the life insured; this has been determined to be the same as in the case of marine insurances (c).

Remedy against the estate of a bankrupt insurer.

(a) See book 1, ch. 15, § 2.—(b) See his judgment in Bermon v. Woodbridge, sup. 662, and in Tyrie v. Fletcher, sup. 659.

(c) See the case of Cox v. Liotard, Doug. 166, n. sup. 732.

END OF THE THIRD BOOK.

BOOK THE FOURTH.

Of Insurance against Fire.

WE are now arrived at the fourth and last branch of our subject, which may be most conveniently treated under the following heads

- I. Of the Nature of this Contract.
- II. Of the Interest of the Insured.
- III. Of the Risk which the Insurers engage to run.
- IV. Of the Assignment of the Policy.
- V. Of the Proof of Loss.

CHAP. I.

Of the Nature of this Contract.

Insurance against fire defined.

BY this contract the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium received by him, either in a gross sum, or by annual payments, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all loss or damage which he may sustain in his houses or other buildings, stock, goods, and merchandize, by fire, during a limited period of time.

The time of its introduction into England unknown.

I have not been able to ascertain the period of the introduction of insurance against fire into this country. But it has certainly been in use here considerably more than a century. Of late years, notwithstanding a very heavy stamp duty imposed upon these insurances, they have been brought into very general, I might almost say universal, use, in this country; particularly in London and other cities and large towns:

Very little in use in other countries.

I do not find, however, that this species of insurance is much in use in other countries. It was not till the year 1754 that it came into use at Paris. In that year, one of the companies instituted there for marine insurances, obtained from the government permission to make insurances against fire. But they have never, as Pothier informs us, become become general even at Paris (1). In Holland, though insurance against fire is not altogether unknown, few people seek its protection; perhaps because in that country they can rely so much on their own caution, that they think it unnecessary to pay for any greater security. Indeed I have heard it confidently asserted, by persons well acquainted with the cities both of London and Amsterdam, that, after making all fair allowances, there is, upon an average, more property destroyed by fire in the former in one year, than in the latter in ten.

It cannot be denied that this species of insurance affords great comfort to individuals, and often preserves whole families from poverty and ruin. And yet it has been much doubted, by wise and intelligent persons, whether, in a general and national point of view, the benefits resulting from it are not more than counterbalanced by the mischiefs it occasions. Not to mention the carelessness and inattention which security naturally creates, every person who has any concern in any of the fire-offices, or who has attended the courts of Westminster Hall for any length of time, must own that insurance has been the original cause of many fires in London, with all their train of mischievous consequences.

On the other hand, the advocates for this species of insurance, though they admit it to have been sometimes the cause of intentional fires, insist, that, even as a national concern, the benefits vastly outweigh the mischiefs which proceed from it. And when we recollect the precautions used by the different insurance companies, to prevent the spreading of fires, by providing a number of fire engines, which are kept in constant repair, and fit for immediate use, not only in all parts of the metropolis, but in every other considerable town in the kingdom;—by keeping in constant pay, a number of engineers and fire-men, expert in extinguishing fires, and porters for the removal of goods;—by employing a number of these in patrolling the streets at all hours of the night, in constant readiness to fly to the spot from whence

Whether in a national point of view it be more hurtful than beneficial.

The objections to it.

More than counterbalanced by its benefits.

(a) Vid. Pothier tit. Des assurances, n. 3.

any alarm of fire may proceed : When we recollect that the courage, promptitude, and address of these people often stop the progress of the most dangerous fires, and thereby rescue many valuable lives; and immense property from destruction :—When these benefits, I say, are fairly considered, they seem to outweigh all the disadvantages that can be put in the opposite scale.

Fire insurance companies.

A considerable number of companies have been established in London and other parts of the kingdom for insurances against fire. Of these some are called Contribution Societies, in which every person insured becomes a member or proprietor, parting in profit and loss. Such are the Hand in Hand, and the Westminster fire-offices, for the insurance of houses and other buildings; and the Union fire-office, for insurance of goods. The other companies insure both houses and goods, at their own risk. Of these the principal are the London, and Royal Exchange, assurance corporations, the Sun, the Phoenix, the British, and many other offices recently established for this branch of insurance.

Policies against fire are subject to a stamp of 1s.
and to a yearly duty of 2s. 6d.
per cent. on the sum insured

As to the duties, to which this contract is liable, the stat. 44 G. III. c. 98, § 1, repeals all the former stamp duties (a) imposed on policies of insurance against fire; and, (by § 2.) imposes on every policy, in lieu thereof, a new duty of one shilling, and also the yearly sum of two shillings and sixpence (b), for every 100l. and so in proportion for any greater or less sum insured, is laid on every policy for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, and merchandize, or other property, from loss by fire.—This statute (c) enacts that the provisions of the former acts, except where they are altered by this act, shall extend to the duties imposed by this act.

(a) Vid. the schedule A. annexed to this act. — (b) Vid. schedule B. — (c) § 8.

CHAP. II.

Of the Interest of the Insured.

I DO not find that it has ever been a practice to make insurances against fire, avowedly without interest. The probable consequences of such insurances would, I conceive, afford a powerful argument against the legality of any insurance without interest, at common law. If a wager policy be good, at common law, I do not know that it must necessarily assume the form of any particular species of insurance: But if the question, whether a wager policy be a legal contract at common law, were to arise in the case of an insurance against fire, it is impossible to suppose that the judges could ever be prevailed upon to sanction by their authority a contract of so mischievous a tendency.—Lord Chancellor King, in the case of Lynch v. Dalzell, which we shall presently have occasion to cite at large, (a) says; “The party insuring must have a property at the time of the loss, or he can sustain no loss, and consequently can be entitled to no satisfaction.” And Lord Hardwicke, in the case of the Sadlers Company v. Badcock (b), lays it down as law, “that the insured must have an interest or property at the time of insuring, and at the time the loss happens.” So that, according to these two great authorities, it is clear that an insurance against fire, without interest, would have been void at common law. But if any doubt remained upon that question, it has been removed by the stat. 14 G. III. c. 48. That act, though it is entitled, an act for regulating insurances upon lives, yet, by the enacting clause, (sect 1.) (c), it prohibits all insurances without interest, “upon any event

Whether an insurance against fire without interest be void at common law.

Since the stat. 14 G. III. c. 48. it would be clearly void.

(a) Inf. 801.—(b) Inf. 804.—(c) Sup. 774.

The insured can only recover, in case of loss, to the extent of his interest.

“or events whatsoever” The 4th section, indeed, provides that it shall not extend to marine insurances, which shews that it was the intention of the legislature that it should extend, according to the above words in the enacting clause, to every other species of insurance, and therefore there can be no doubt of its extending to insurances against fire; and consequently the insured, whatever may be the amount of his insurance, can only recover to the extent of his interest.

The necessity of preventing insurances against fire, without interest.

There is reason to believe that insurances against fire are often made to a large amount upon property of very small value. This can only be done with a fraudulent view, and a premeditated fire must be the necessary consequence.—Where a loss has happened, and there is no colour to suspect any unfair practice on the part of the insured, I think the offices ought not to content themselves with being merely just: They ought to be generous and liberal towards a fair sufferer. But where there is any reasonable ground to suspect fraud, it is to be hoped that the managers of no office will, from any false notion of generosity, or any wish to acquire popular favour, so far forget what they owe to the public, as well as to their own characters, as to suffer the claim to be satisfied, without the most scrupulous investigation.

If there be several insurances on the same property, each office must have notice of this.

It often happens that no one office will insure to the full amount required by a particular person, who has a large property to insure; and in such case, the party can only cover his whole interest, by several insurances made at different offices. But then it is proper that each office should have notice of every insurance thus made on the same effects; for otherwise great frauds might be practised by insuring the same property to its full value, at several different offices at the same time. To guard against such frauds, there is, in the printed proposals of each of the offices, an article which declares that, persons insuring must give notice of any other insurance made elsewhere upon the same houses or goods, that the same may be allowed by indorsement on the policy, in order that each office may bear its rateable proportion of any loss that may happen (a). But unless such notice be given of each insurance to the office where another insurance is made on the same effects, the insurance made without such notice will be void.

It is not necessary, however, in order to constitute an insurable interest, that the insured shall, in every instance, have the absolute and unqualified property of the effects insured. A trustee, a mortgagee, a reversioner, a factor or agent, with the custody of goods to be sold upon commission, may insure; but with this caution, that the nature of the property be distinctly specified (b); and that all the insurances upon the same property, taken together, shall not exceed the full value thereof.

But a person may insure without having the absolute property.

(a) Vid. sup. 146. — (b) See the 6th article of the proposals of the Sun fire-office, and 7th article of the proposals of the Phoenix fire-office.

C H A P. III.

Of the Risk, which Insurers against Fire, engage to run.

The risk usually insured against.

BY the terms of the usual policy the insurers undertake to pay, make good, and satisfy to the insured all loss or damage, which may happen by fire, during the term specified in the policy, to the houses or other buildings, furniture, or merchandize insured.

The proviso, excepting fires occasioned by extraordinary events.

By an article of the printed proposals, which, as we shall presently see (a), are now to be considered as making a part of the contract, it is provided that, 'No loss or damage by fire, happening by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever, will be made good by this company.'

Drinkwater v. Lond. Assur. 2 Wils. 363.

The words usurped power, in the proviso, mean an invasion from abroad or an internal rebellion; not the power of a common mob.

In the following case, a question arose upon the construction of the words usurped power, in this proviso.—It was an action of covenant on a policy of the London Assurance company against fire, upon a malting office at Norwich. The defendants, amongst other pleas, pleaded that the malting office was burned by an usurped power; and issue being joined on this plea, the cause was tried at Norwich assizes, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 469*l.* subject to the opinion of the court upon a case, which stated, 'That on the 27th of November, a mob arose at Norwich, on account of the high price of provisions, and spoiled and destroyed a considerable quantity of flour; that thereupon the proclamation was read, and the mob dispersed for that time. That afterwards another mob arose and burnt down the malting office mentioned in the policy.'—Lord C. J. Wilmot, Mr. Justice Clive, and Mr. Justice Bathurst, against the opinion of Mr. Justice Gould, determined that the true import of the words usurped power in the proviso, was, an invasion from abroad, or an internal rebellion, where armies are drawn up against each other; when the laws are silent; and when the firing of towns becomes unavoidable: But that those words could not mean the power of a common mob.

(a) Vid. Oldman v. Bequicke, Routledge v. Burrell, and Wood v. Werley, inf. ch. 5.

The London Assurance company still, however, retain the proviso in its original form. The Sun fire-office, in the year 1727, added the words civil commotion (a); and upon the construction of these words another question arose in consequence of the tumults with which the metropolis of the British empire was disgraced in the summer of the year 1780. These tumults were excited by certain persons who, under the mask of religion, pretended to seek the repeal of a law then lately passed, granting to Roman catholics, certain indulgences and some mitigation of the hardships under which they, at that time, laboured in this country; but their object was nothing less than the entire subversion of the government. And to accomplish this purpose, they excited to universal devastation, a desperate and lawless rabble, made up of malefactors and fanatics, who, though actuated by different motives, are at all times equally prone to mischief and rebellion. Fortunately for this country, the militia was at that time embodied, the rioters were repressed, and the constitution preserved.

Amongst others devoted to destruction by this desperate banditti, was Mr. Langdale, a catholic, and a considerable distiller. They fired his premises; and all his stock

The words civil commotion, were held to exclude losses in the riots of 1780.

Langdale v. Assurance and others, at N. P. M. b. V. ac. 1780. MS.

(a) Most of the other offices have introduced the same words; and some have the words 'riot, tumult, and civil commotion.' It is rather remarkable, however, that neither the Hand in Hand or the Union Fire Office have any proviso or exception of this nature in their printed proposals. It were, perhaps, to be wished, that none of the offices would insure against the mischiefs occasioned by riot and civil commotion. Men cannot be too deeply interested in the preservation of the public peace, and the support of lawful authority.

of liquors and other effects were there destroyed.—Being insured in the Sun Fire Office, he brought his action upon the policy, to recover a satisfaction for the loss he had thus sustained. The office defended this action on the ground that this loss was occasioned by civil commotion.—The cause was tried by Lord Mansfield, who, in his address to the jury said;—"Most undoubtedly every man's leaning must be to the side of the plaintiff, in order to divide the loss in so great a calamity. But that inclination must be governed by the rules of law and justice; and the only question to be determined arises singly upon the construction of two words in the policy. It appears that in the year 1720, the London Assurance company put into their policies all the words here used, except civil commotion; and any fire happening by a foreign enemy is clearly provided against, whether they burn houses, or set fire to a town. The words military or usurped power are ambiguous; but they have already been the subject of a judicial determination (a). They must mean rebellion, conducted by authority; as in the year 1745, when the rebels came to Derby; and if they had ordered any part of the town, or a single house, to be set on fire, that would have been by authority of a rebellion. That is the only distinction in the case:—It must be by rebellion got to such a head, as to be under some authority. In the year 1726, the Sun Fire Office, in imitation of the London Assurance company, inserted the same exception: This provided against rebellion, determined rebellion, with generals who could give orders: But the Sun Fire Office did not think this sufficient; and therefore, in the year 1727, they introduced the words civil commotion; words as general and untechnical as can possibly be used. They do not say civil commotion, such as amounts to high treason. They avoid saying civil commotion amounting to felony or to a misfeamour, but they use the term "civil commotion," taking the largest and most general sense of the words that the language will allow: They do not even say a riot. It may be a question, in point of law, whether an assembly or multitude be a riot. But the single question here is, whether this has been a civil commotion. If there be a case, to which these words can be applicable, it is to a case of this sort. I cannot see any of the other words, to which it can be applied. Usurped power takes in rebellion, acting under usurped authority. From a foreign enemy the office is secured: But what is a civil commotion? It is something else. The present was an insurrection of the people resisting all law, setting the authority of the government at nought; and depriving of its protection whoever was obnoxious to them. What was the object and end of this violent insurrection? It took place in many parts of the town at the same time, and the very same night; the mob were in Broad street, St. Catherine's, in Coleman-street, at Blackfriar's Bridge, and at the plaintiff's. What is their object? General destruction, general confusion. It certainly was meant to aim at the very vitals of the constitution. It was not a private matter, under a cry of No popery only, to destroy all papists. Newgate is burnt down: The Fleet prison, the King's Bench prison, the new Bridewell, are burnt down, and all the prisoners set at liberty. The Bank attacked; the Exchequer and Pay offices in Broad-street threatened. The houses of a vast number of papists burned and destroyed. Military resistance necessary, and an extraordinary stretch was made, which was justified by necessity. Many men have been killed. What is this but a civil commotion, if any precise meaning can be affixed to those words. It is said that this is a civil commotion distinct from usurped power and rebellion. It is admitted, that this kind of insurrection may amount to high treason: and, to be sure, it may. But the office do not mean to try whether these rioters were guilty of high treason or not. It is not put upon that, but on the ground of a civil commotion. It is not an occasional riot: That would be another question. I do not give any opinion what that might be. You will give your opinions, whether the facts of this case bring it within the idea of a civil commotion. I think a civil commotion is this; an insurrection

(a) Vid. Drinkwater v. Lond. Assur. sup. 790.

tion of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to a rebellion, where there is an usurped power. If you think it was such an insurrection of the people for the purposes of general mischief, though not amounting to a rebellion, but within the exception of the policy, you will find for the defendants. If not, you will find for the plaintiffs."—The jury found a verdict for the defendants.

But an insurance company who pay a loss, occasioned by riot, may sue the Hundred upon the riot act, in the name of the insured.

But Mr. Langdale was not without remedy. He afterwards brought his action against the Hundred, upon the riot act, 1 G. I. c. 5, § 6, and recovered a full satisfaction for the damage he had sustained.—Had the office not been exempted from this loss by the words civil commotion in their proposals, they would have had their remedy over against the Hundred. In the following case, which came before the court of King's Bench in the year 1782, it was determined that an insurance company, having paid a loss occasioned by riots, may recover back such loss, in an action against the Hundred, on the above act, brought in the name of the insured.

Mason v. Sainbury, E. 22 G. III. B. R.—MS.

That was an action brought against the Hundred on the riot act, stat. 1 G. I. c. 5, § 6, to recover a satisfaction for the damage sustained by the plaintiff, by the demolition of his house, in the riots of 1780.—Upon the trial of the cause, there was a verdict for the plaintiff, with 259l. damages, subject to the opinion of the court on a case, which stated, in substance, that the plaintiff had insured his house in the Hand in Hand fire office; that the fire office had paid the loss, without any action being brought against them; and that this action was brought against the Hundred in the plaintiff's name, and with his consent, for the benefit of the insurance office, and to reimburse them the loss they had paid.—The question was, whether, as the plaintiff had already received a satisfaction, this action could now be maintained against the Hundred on behalf of the insurers.—It was contended on the part of the Hundred, that it was the policy of the act, besides the inducement to suppress riots, to divide the loss, and prevent the ruin of individuals; but there could be no reason of policy or justice to extend this, beyond the party himself, to bodies or individuals, who have wilfully put themselves into this danger: That though it was true that a man, having different remedies may pursue either, and it is no defence to the one, that he might have pursued the other; yet, when he has recovered by one, he shall not afterwards seek a second satisfaction by the other.—But the court were unanimously of opinion that the office had a right in this case, to recover against the Hundred, in the name of the insured.—Lord Mansfield said;—"Though the office paid without a suit, this must be considered as without prejudice; and it is, to all intents, as if it had never been paid. The question comes to this: Can the owner of the house, having insured it, come against the Hundred, under this act? Who is first liable? If the Hundred be first liable, still it makes no difference: If the insurers be first liable, then payment by them is a satisfaction, and the Hundred is not liable. But the contrary is evident, from the nature of the contract of insurance. It is an indemnity. We every day see the insured put in the place of the insurer. In abandonment it is so; and the insurer uses the name of the insured. It is an extremely clear case. The act puts the Hundred in the place of the trespassers; and on principles of policy, I am satisfied that it is to be considered as if the insurers had not paid a farthing."—Mr. Justice Willes said;—"I cannot distinguish this from the case of an escape. If the sheriff pays, he has his remedy over against the party. Though the Hundred is not answerable criminally, yet they are not to be considered as wholly free from blame. They may have been negligent, which is partly the principle of the act."—Mr. Justice Alburl said;—"At all events the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict to the amount of the premium, having had no compensation as to that. But, on the larger ground, I am of opinion that the Hundred is liable in this action for all the damage sustained by the plaintiff. It is like the case of an abandonment, and the office is not to be in a worse situation for having paid the loss without a suit."—Mr. Justice Buller said;—"Whether this case be considered on strict, or on liberal, principles of insurance law, the plaintiff must recover. Strictly, no notice can be taken of any thing out of the record. The contract with the office, strictly taken, is a wager; liberally, it is an indemnity: But, on the words, it is only a wager, of which third persons shall not avail themselves. It has been rightly admitted that the Hundred is put in the place of the trespassers. How could the trespassers have availed themselves of this satisfaction made by the Office? Could they have pleaded it by way of accord and satisfaction? It was not paid as a satisfaction for the trespass, and the facts of the case would not have supported such a plea. The best way is to consider this case as a contract of indemnity, in which the principle is, that the insurer and the insured are as one person; and in that light, the paying before or after, can make no difference."

beyond

How far the insured is protected by the policy during the 15 days allowed for paying the renewed premium.

In general, the risk commences from the signing of the policy, unless some other time be specified; and it will of course end with the term for which it is made. Insurances against fire are, in general, either annual, or for a term of seven years at an annual premium; and the offices, as an indulgence to the insured, generally allow 15 days from the expiration of each year for the payment of the premium for the next succeeding year. But the insured has always been considered as being under the protection of the policy till the expiration of the 15 days, provided the premium were paid within that time.

How far in the case of a half-yearly policy.

In the printed proposals of the Sun Fire Office, and of some others, there is this article:—"On bespeaking policies all persons are to make a deposit for the policy, stamp duty, and mark; and shall pay the premium to the next quarter day, and from thence for one year more at least; and shall, as long as the managers agree to accept the same, make all future payments annually at the said office, within 15 days after the day limited by their respective policies, upon forfeiture of the benefit thereof; and no insurance is to take place till the premium be actually paid by the insured, his, her, or their agent or agents."—In the following case it became a question how far the insured, upon a half-yearly policy, was was protected during the 15 days, before the new premium was actually paid and accepted.

It was an action against the Liverpool fire office, which had adopted the above article. The plaintiff declared on a policy dated the 10th of December 1788, in which, (after reciting that the plaintiffs had paid 7l. 10s. to the office, and had agreed to pay 7l. 10s. on the 10th of June 1789, and the like sum every six months during the continuance of the policy), it was declared that, from the date of the policy, so long as the plaintiffs should pay the sum of 7l. 10s. at the times and places aforesaid, and the trustees or acting members of the society should agree to accept the same, the funds of the society should be liable to pay the plaintiff such damage and loss as they should suffer by fire, not exceeding 6000l. according to the exact tenor of their printed proposals.—The declaration, after setting forth the above article of the printed proposals, stated that the society had, from the year 1777, been in the practice of insuring for periods less than a year, by policies similar to the present, referring, in like manner, to the same printed proposals; and that they had received the premiums within the 15 days after the times limited in such policies, and the policies thereupon remained in force. It then stated a loss, to the amount of 6000l. on the 11th of December 1789, before the expiration of the 15 days, and before any refusal to accept the renewed premium, or to continue the policy. There was a second count, stating that before the expiration of the 15 days, the plaintiffs tendered at the office 7l. 10s. to the managers of the society, they not having then disagreed or refused to accept the same.—The defendants, amongst other pleas to the first count, pleaded that the plaintiffs did not pay the sum of 7l. 10s. on or before the 10th of December, as they ought to have done, in order to have continued the policy to the time when the loss happened. To the second count they pleaded, that the sum of 7l. 10s. was not tendered to the managers, until after the 10th of December.—Upon a demurrer to these pleas, the court determined that, under the above circumstances, the plaintiffs

Tarleton and others v. Stanish and others.
5 T. R. 695.
1 Bof. & Pul.
483.

The insured in a policy agrees to pay the premium half-yearly, within 15 days of the expiration of the former half year. A loss happens within the 15 days, but before the renewed premium is paid.—The insurers are not liable, though the premium is tendered before the end of the 15 days.

tiffs were not entitled to recover, and gave judgment for the defendants.—Lord Kenyon said;—“It is admitted that the insurance did not extend to half a year and 15 days; and that completely puts an end to the whole case. The plaintiffs stipulated to pay 7l. 10s. half yearly, on the 10th of June, and the 10th of December; and that they would, as long as the managers agreed to accept the same, make their payments within 15 days after the day limited; but no insurance is to take place until the premium be actually paid. The continuation of the term, therefore, depends on two circumstances which must both concur; namely, that the insured should pay the 7l. 10s. and that the insurers should agree to accept that sum. Barely stating these facts is sufficient to shew that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover.—This judgment was afterwards affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber.

But several offices hold themselves liable during the 15 days on annual policies.

Soon after the above decision, the Royal Exchange, the Phoenix, and some other insurance companies, gave notice that they did not mean to take advantage of this judgment; but would hold themselves liable for any loss during the 15 days that are allowed for the payment of the renewed premium upon annual policies, and others for a longer period: But that every policy for a shorter period than a year, would cease at six o'clock in the evening of the day mentioned therein.

If the insurance company, having an option to determine the insurance at the end of the year, give the insured notice of their intention to do so, they are not liable for a loss happening within the 15 days after the end of the year.

If it be agreed by the policy that the insurance shall continue as long as the insured shall continue to pay the stipulated premium, and the company shall agree to accept it; and, by the printed proposals, the company agree that persons insured for a year or more should be considered as insured for 15 days beyond the expiration of their policies; and the company, before the expiration of the year, give the insured notice to pay an increased premium, otherwise they would not continue the insurance, and the insured refuse this; the company is not liable for any loss upon this policy happening within the 15 days after the expiration of the year, though the insured, after the loss happened, and before the expiration of the 15 days, tender the full premium which had been demanded.

For

For the effect of the whole contract being only to give the insured an option to continue the insurance, or not, during the 15 days after the expiration of the year, by paying the premium for the year ensuing, notwithstanding any intervening loss, provided the company have not, before the end of the year, determined the option by giving notice that they would not renew the contract (a).

(a) R. Salwin and others v. James and another, 6 East 571.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Assignment of the Policy.

An assignment of the policy to one who has no interest in the effects insured, is void.

A POLICY of insurance, being a chose in action, is, in strictness, not assignable at law. But, like every other chose in action, it may be assigned in equity; and courts of law now take notice of such assignment; so that the ancient rule of the common law, being often found injurious to the interests of a commercial country, is now, in a manner, disregarded, or at least evaded. But the mere assignment of the policy, would be of little avail, without an assignment of the subject matter of the insurance also. The assignee could derive no benefit from the policy, unless the interest of the insured were transferred with it; because, as we have already shewn, the insured must not only have an interest in the subject matter of the insurance, at the time of insuring, but also at the time the loss happens (a).

Upon the death of the insured, the policy is continued to his representative.

In the printed proposals of all the offices it is declared that, upon the death of an insured, his interest in the policy shall be continued to his representative to whom the property belongs, provided such representative, before any new payment be made, procure his right to be indorsed on the policy at the office.

The contribution societies seem to allow the assignment of their policies without any express permission.

In the proposals of the Hand in Hand fire office, it is declared, that if the premises insured should be assigned, the assignment must be entered at the office; and that assignments of policies shall be entered at the office, within 42 days after they are executed; or else the assignee shall have no benefit thereby. And in the proposals of the

(a) Per Lord King, Ch. in Lynch v. Datzell, inf. 801; Per Lord Hardwicke Ch. in the Sadlers Company v. Badcock, inf. 804; vid. sup. 787.

Union fire office, it is declared that every member transferring his policy, shall, within three months, give notice to the directors, and bring his policy to the office, to have such transfer indorsed.

The Westminster office merely requires that the assignment shall be entered at the office as soon as possible. So that, it would seem, the policies of these three contribution societies may be assigned, without any express permission from the respective offices for that purpose; and that it is sufficient if the assignment be brought there to be entered.

But the other offices give notice, generally upon the policy, that it shall be of no force if assigned, unless such assignment be allowed by an entry in the books of the office, or indorsed on the policy. So that it seems to be a settled rule in all those offices, not to allow any transfer of any policy, without the consent of the managers. This is perfectly reasonable. The offices may chuse for whom they will insure; they are not obliged to insure for every person that may apply to them. In some instances, character may be a sufficient reason for a refusal. But the offices would be deprived of this option, if any person insured might assign his policy to whom he pleased, without their concurrence. This will appear from the following case.

On the 28th of July 1721, one Richard Ireland obtained a policy from the Sun fire-office for the insurance of his house, being the Angel inn at Gravesend, with his goods therein, from loss and damage by fire: And it was agreed, that so long as Ireland should pay five shillings a quarter, the society would satisfy the said Ireland, his executors, administrators, and assigns, his loss not exceeding 1000*l.* according to the exact tenor of their printed proposals.—Some considerable time afterwards, Ireland died, leaving his son Anthony his sole executor, who brought the policy to the office, and had an indorsement made thereon, that the same belonged to him; and he afterwards paid one year's premium up to Christmas 1727. In August 1727, the house was destroyed by fire; and some time afterwards, the plain-

But the other offices allow of no assignment without their express permission.

Lynch and another v. Dalzell and others, 3 Bro. Parl. Ca. 497.

The insured upon a house and goods assigns the house to A. and the goods to B.; B. assigns the goods over to A. to secure to A. the money advanced for B. to purchase them. Afterwards a fire happens, and the insured assigns the policy to A.; and B. also assigns to him his interest in the policy. The assignment of the policy being made after the fire happened, and without the consent of the office, the assignee cannot recover the loss under it.

tiffs applied to the office, and alleged that they had purchased the house and goods of Anthony Ireland; that the same were their property at the time of the fire; and that they had an assignment of the policy made to them, at the same time that the house and goods were assigned; and they produced an affidavit from Roger Lynch, in which he swore that their loss, by the burning of the house, amounted to 500*l.* and upwards; and upon this affidavit was indorsed the usual certificate from the minister and churchwardens, &c.: But neither in the affidavit or certificate, was any mention made of any loss being sustained by the plaintiffs by the burning of any goods; nor was any affidavit made by Anthony Ireland, that he had suffered any loss.—The plaintiffs, however, insisted that the office should pay them 100*l.* for their loss by the burning of the house and goods; and they filed a bill in chancery, setting forth, that Anthony Ireland, on the 24th of June 1727, for 250*l.*, assigned to them a lease of the house and stables; but that the goods for which the plaintiffs, as they alleged, were to pay 500*l.*, being intended for one Thomas Church, who was to hold the inn under them, Ireland, by bill of sale of the same date, sold the same to Church for his own use. The bill also stated the assignment of the policy to the plaintiffs; and that, although the bill of sale of the goods was made to Church; yet that the plaintiffs paid the purchase money, and Church assigned the bill of sale to them for securing it; and also released to the plaintiffs his interest in the policy.—The defendants, by their answer, alleged that the affidavit produced was not agreeable to the proposals; that no assignment of the policy was made to the plaintiffs, nor any assignment of it made to them by Church, till after the fire. They insisted that the policies issued by the office were not in their nature assignable, being only contracts to make good the loss which the contracting party himself should sustain; and that no other person was entitled to any benefit from it. The cause proceeded to issue; and witnesses being examined on both sides, it appeared upon the plaintiff's own evidence, that the agreement for the assignment of the policy, (if any), was not till after the agreement for the

the purchase of Ireland's term in the house; and that the assignment of it, though bearing date before, was not made till some time after the fire: So that the agreement for assigning the policy was a voluntary concession on the part of Ireland, and independent of the bargain for the house, and not made till after Ireland's interest in the house was determined; nor carried into execution till after the loss had happened. And as to the plaintiff's property in the goods, they proved an assignment from Church to them, as a security for 300l.; but omitted to state when this assignment was made, though the defendants, by their answer, had put the time in issue.—Upon this case, the Lord Chancellor King dismissed the plaintiff's bill.—He said;—"These policies are not insurances of the specific things mentioned to be insured, nor do such insurances attach on the realty, or in any manner go with the same, as incident thereto, by any conveyance or assignment: But they are only special agreements with the persons insured, against such loss or damage as they may sustain. The party insured must have a property at the time of the loss, or he can sustain no loss: and consequently can be entitled to no satisfaction. There was no contract ever made between the office and the plaintiffs for any insurance on the premises in question. Not only the express words, but the end and design of the contract with Ireland, do, in case of any loss, limit and restrain the satisfaction to such loss as should be sustained by Richard Ireland only; and the indorsement on the policy transferred that right to his executor Anthony Ireland only. These policies are not in their nature assignable; nor is the interest in them ever intended to be transferable from one to another, without the express consent of the office. The transactions in the present case, by changing the property backwards and forwards, and rendering it uncertain whose the true property really was, raise a suspicion, and fully justify the caution of the office in preventing the assignment, without the consent of the managers; which method is pursued by all the insurance offices. Besides, the plaintiff's claim is, at best, founded only on an assignment never agreed for, till the person insured had determined his interest in the policy, by parting with his whole property, and never executed till the loss had actually happened."—Upon appeal to the House of Lords, the decree of the Court of Chancery was affirmed.

The policy does not pass with the effects insured.

The policy is only assignable with the consent of the office.

The Sadler's Company v. Radcock and others, 2 At. 554.

A lessee having an unexpired term of six years and an half in a house, insures for seven years. After the term expired the house is burnt, and afterwards, but before the expiration of the policy, the insured assigns it to the reversioner, without the concurrence of the office. — The assignee cannot claim any benefit under the policy,

The same principles were adopted in another case, where one Anne Strode, having six years and a half to come in a lease of a house from the plaintiffs, on the 27th of April 1734, insured the house for 400*l.* in the Hund in Hand fire office, for seven years, and thereby became a proprietor; and, on paying twelve shillings down, and 3*l.* some time after, the company agreed, out of their contribution stock, 'to pay the said sum of 400*l.* to her, her executors and assignees, so often as the house should be burnt down during the said term, unless the directors should rebuild the same;' and on the back of the policy it was indorsed, 'that if the policy should be assigned, the assignment must be entered within 21 days after the making thereof.'—Mrs. Strode's lease expired at Midsummer 1740; the house was burnt down in January 1741; and she assigned the policy to the plaintiffs on the 23d of February 1741. The plaintiffs tendered the assignment to the defendants to be entered in their books, but they refused to accept it. The company, in 1738, which was subsequent to Mrs. Strode's policy, made an order, 'That whereas policies expire upon the property of the insured's ceasing; if there is no application of the insured to assign, or to have the loss made up, then the person having the property, may insure the said house in the said office, notwithstanding the term for which the said house was originally insured is not expired.' The question upon this case was, whether the plaintiffs, the assignees of Mrs. Strode, were entitled to the benefit of the policy.—The court determined that they were not entitled to any benefit under it. — The Lord Chancellor Hardwicke said; — "During the progress of this cause, while the defendants seemed to depend chiefly upon the subsequent order,

I was of opinion against them. But, upon hearing what was further offered, I think the plaintiffs are not entitled to be relieved. There may be three questions made in this cause. First, Whether this accident, which has happened, be such a loss, as obliges the defendants to make satisfaction to the plaintiffs. Secondly, whether upon the terms of the original policy, the office be obliged to do it. Thirdly, which is rather consequential of the former, whether the plaintiffs are properly assignees of Mrs. Strode under this policy. If this matter rested singly upon the policy itself, I should not think it such a loss, as would oblige the defendants to make satisfaction. Under this policy, the state of the case is, Mrs. Strode was only a lessee; her time expired at Midsummer 1740; the house was burnt down in January after, within the seven years; the plaintiffs, the Sadler's Company, were ground landlords, and entitled to the reversion of the term: Upon the 23d of February, seven months after the expiration of the term, and one month after the fire, the assignment was made, and in consideration of five shillings only; so that it must be taken as a voluntary assignment, as it stands before me. It has been insisted, on the part of the defendants, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover, as standing in the place of Mrs. Strode, because she had no loss or damage, her interest ceasing before the fire happened. And this introduces the second and third questions. I am of opinion, that it is necessary the party insured should have an interest or property at the time of insuring and at the time the fire happens. It has been said for the plaintiffs, that it is in nature of a wager laid by the insurance company, and that it does not signify to whom they pay, if lost. Now these insurances from fire have been introduced in later times, and therefore differ from insurance of ships, because there, interest or no interest is almost constantly inserted; and if not inserted, you cannot recover, unless you prove a property. By the first clause in the deed of contribution in 1696, the year this society, called the Hand in Hand Office, incorporated themselves, the society are to make satisfaction in case of any loss by fire. To whom, or for what loss, are they to make satisfaction? Why to the person insured, and for the loss he may have sustained; for it cannot properly be called insuring the thing, for there is no possibility of doing it, and therefore, must mean insuring the person from damage. By the terms of the policy, the defendants might begin to build and repair within six days after the fire happens. It has been truly said, this gives the society an option to pay or rebuild, and shews most manifestly that they meant to insure upon the property of the insured, because nobody else can give them leave to lay even a brick; for another person might fancy a house of a different kind. Thus it stands upon the original agreement. The next question will be, whether the subsequent order made by the defendants in 1738, has made any alteration. I am of opinion that it has not; for it was made only to explain a particular case in the policy, for it might have been a question, whether Mrs. Strode could have come before the expiration of the term, to examine the books of the office, and therefore this order was made to give her such a power. It has been strongly objected that the society could not make such an order. I am very tender of saying, whether they can or not. Because, on the one hand, it might be hard to say, that, as a society, they cannot make any order for the good of the society; On the other hand, it would be a dangerous thing to give them a power to make an alteration, that may materially vary the interest of the insured. The assignment is not at all within the terms of this order, because it is plain, it meant an assignment before the loss happened. Now with regard to the loss happening before the assignment made, Mrs. Strode was entitled to nothing but what was to be paid back upon the deposit. It is plain she thought so, for if she had imagined she had been entitled to 400*l.* would any friend have advised her to make a present of it to the plaintiff? The case of Lynch v. Daltzell, in the House of Lords, shews how strict this court and that house are, on the construction of policies, to avoid frauds."

The foregoing determinations shew that, upon an assignment or other transfer of the property insured, the assignee should be very careful to get the policy regularly transferred to him, by the proper indorsement at the office. And in a former part of this work, (a) it was shewn that if the assignor undertake to get this done, he will be liable to the assignee for all the consequences of neglecting or omitting to do so; even though his undertaking were merely gratuitous.

If an assignor of the property insured undertake to get the policy transferred to the assignee, he will be liable to an action for neglecting to do so.

(a) Vid. Wilkinson v. Coverdale, sup. 289.

C H A P V.

Of the Proof of Loss.

The account of the loss, the affidavits of the insured, and the certificate from the minister, &c. required by the printed proposals.

THE form of the policy is nearly the same in all the offices (a). The principal difference between them consists in the terms of certain proposals, as they are called, to which it refers, as making a part of the contract. One principal article, which is found in the proposals of several of the offices imports,—‘ That persons insured sustaining any loss or damage by fire are forthwith to give notice thereof at the office, and, as soon as possible afterwards, deliver in as particular an account of their loss and damage, as the nature of the case will admit of ; and make proof of the same by their oath or affirmation, according to the form practised in the said office ; and by their books of accounts, or other proper vouchers, as shall be reasonably required ; and procure a certificate under the hands of the minister and churchwardens, together with some other reputable inhabitants of the parish, not concerned in such loss, importing,— ‘ That they are well acquainted with the character and circumstances of the person or persons insured, and do know or verily believe, that, he, she,* or they, really and by misfortune, without any fraud or evil practice, have sustained by such fire, the loss and damage, as his, her, or their loss, to the value therein-mentioned : But, till such affidavit and certificate of such insured’s loss shall be made and produced, the loss money shall not be payable. And, if there appear any fraud or false swearing, such sufferers shall be excluded all be-

(a) Vid. Appendix No. VII.

‘nefit by their policies.’ In the policies of these offices the insurers undertake to pay the loss, not exceeding the sum insured, ‘according to the exact tenor of their printed ‘proposals,’ describing their proposals by their respective dates.

The above article, though not worded in the best possible manner, has undoubtedly a very beneficial tendency. Nothing can be more reasonable in a case where there is so great a temptation to fraud, than to require a testimonial from persons in public situations in the parish where a fire has happened, who have opportunities of informing themselves as to the characters of the insured, and the fairness of their claims; and who are not likely to connive at any fraud. “It is a duty,” says Mr. Justice Lawrence (a), “that the office owes to the public as well as to themselves, to take every precaution to protect themselves against fraud. And unless some such check as the present were interposed, the office would be holding out a premium to wicked men to set fire to their own houses.”—Perhaps it may, some time or other, be thought advisable for all the insurance companies to agree among themselves to have this article revised, and put into a more unexceptionable form, and to adopt it universally. The construction of this article has given occasion to several judicial decisions.

The first was an action against the directors of the Sun Fire Office, upon one of their policies. The plaintiffs, in their declaration, after stating that the bankrupt, the insured, had conformed to the above article, as to the notice, account, and affidavit of the loss; stated that the minister of the parish of Portsea, in which the loss had happened, resided at a distance from the parish, and was wholly unacquainted with the character and circumstances of the insured, and unable to make the certificate required by the policy; but that the insured had procured and delivered to the office a certificate under the hands of several reputable inhabitants of

The reasonableness of requiring this proof.

Oldman and others, assignees of Ingram, v. Beckett and others, 2 H. Bl. 577. n.

To execute the want of the certificate, it is not enough to allege that the minister resides out of the parish, and does not know the insured. And the want of this certificate is a defect of title, for which the court will arrest the judgment, after the plaintiff has obtained a verdict on the question of fraud, and want of interest, the tenor required by the article. The defendants pleaded 1st, That the premises were wilfully set on fire, and burnt down by the insured. 2dly, That at the time of the supposed loss the insured had no interest in the premises. No notice was taken in any of the pleas, of the want of the certificate.—Issues being joined on the above pleas, the cause went to trial, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, damages 300l.—The demand was 1500l. the sum insured.—The defendants moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground, that the plaintiffs had not set forth in their declaration a sufficient title to recover upon the policy against the defendants.—In answer to this application it was said that it was grounded either on the title being defective, or defectively set forth: That the latter objection was cured by the verdict, and the former waived by the defence set up in the pleas.—The court, however, arrested the judgment.—Lord Loughborough said,—“ Though I am satisfied the verdict was right, that the fire was accidental, and that the certificate could not have been procured, because the insured had not sustained all the loss he claimed; yet the rule of intendment after verdict cannot be applied where there is an absolute defect of title, as there is in this case.—As to the pleas, they are wholly collateral to the title.”—Mr. Justice Gould said,—“ Till the affidavit is made, and the certificate procured, the money is not payable: The time of payment, therefore, is not yet come.—Though a person were a bonâ fide sufferer, still he is not entitled without a certificate. The stipulation is a condition precedent, that there shall be a certificate to shew that there is no kind of fraud. Nothing is said about the churchwardens; and the excuse of the minister living at a distance is frivolous.”

(a) 6 T.R. 722.

Routledge v. Sur-
rell, and anr. 1 H.
Bl. 254.

The article of the printed proposals requiring the certificate, though without stamp, seal, or signature, and though only re-

The next case upon this subject was an action of covenant brought by the executrix of the insured on a policy of the Sun Fire Office.—The declaration, by way of excuse for not producing the certificate required by the above article, stated that the testator, the insured, after the loss, being entitled to such certificate, applied to the minister and churchwardens, and to many reputable inhabitants to procure such certificate; but that the deendants.

defendants, by false insinuations, and promises of indemnity, prevailed on the minister, &c. to refuse to sign it. —The defendants, as to the first breach of covenant, pleaded, 1st, That the insured had no interest in the goods, &c. insured; and 2dly, That they did not prevail on the minister, &c. to refuse to sign the certificate. —And as to the second breach, they pleaded, 1st, No interest; and 2dly, That neither the testator in his life time, nor the plaintiff since his death, had procured such certificate. —Issue was joined upon the three first pleas, and the plaintiff demurred to the last. —In arguing that demurrer, it was contended on the part of the plaintiff, 1st, That a condition or restriction could not be annexed to, and made part of a deed, by words of mere reference to a printed paper, distinguished only by the date of the year in which it was printed, without any signature, seal, or stamp, to give it authenticity; and 2dly, That the restriction in question, though it were properly annexed to the deed, was bad in itself. Many authorities were cited in support of these propositions: But the court said that the matter was too clear to admit of a doubt, and gave judgment for the defendants.

At length, in the following case, it has been fully settled, after solemn argument, and upon full deliberation, that the printed proposals are to be taken as part of the policy; that the procuring of the certificate from the minister and churchwardens, &c. is a condition precedent to the payment of the loss; and that the insured has no title to demand any loss, without this certificate, though he should be able to shew that the minister and churchwardens had wrongfully refused to sign one.

That was an action brought by the assignees of the insured, who had become bankrupts, against the Phoenix insurance company. The plaintiffs in their declaration, after stating the loss, and notice to the office, alleged that the bankrupts, soon after the loss, procured and delivered to the company a certificate under the hands of divers reputable householders in the parish, in the usual form; and that, ‘as soon as possible after the loss, they applied to, and requested, the minister and churchwarferred to in the policy, is part of the contract, and is binding on the insured.

It is now settled that the procuring the certificate is a condition precedent to the payment of any loss; and that its being wrongfully refused will not excuse the want of it.

Wood and others
assignees of Lockyer and Bream v Worley, 2 H. Bl.
574. 6 T. R.
710.

‘dins

‘dens of the parish to sign such certificate; but that the said minister and churchwardens, without any reasonable or probable cause whatsoever, did wrongfully and unjustly refuse to sign any such certificate as aforesaid.’—There was another similar count, only omitting the request to the minister and churchwardens to sign the certificate, and their refusal.—To the first count, the defendant pleaded; 1st, Want of interest in the bankrupts; 2dly, That the loss happened by fraud; and 3dly, That the minister and churchwardens did not wrongfully, and without probable cause, refuse to sign the certificate.—To the second count, the defendant pleaded similar pleas, as to want of interest and fraud; and 3dly, That neither the bankrupts nor the plaintiffs had procured any certificate from the minister, churchwardens, and reputable inhabitants, as is required by the said printed proposals.—By the replication issue was joined on the first five pleas; and as to the last plea, the plaintiffs assigned the same excuse for the want of the certificate from the minister, &c. as in the first count of the declaration; and this having proceeded to issue, the cause was tried and the plaintiffs obtained a verdict for 3,000l.—The defendant moved in arrest of judgment on the same ground, as in the case of Oldman v. Bewicke (a), namely, that the production of the certificate was a condition precedent to the payment of the loss, and that the plaintiffs not having averred performance, had shewn no title to recover.—After the argument, Lord C. J. Eyre, Mr. Justice Buller, and Mr. Justice Rooke, seemed to be of opinion that, supposing the printed proposals to be conditions precedent, there had been a performance ex pres; but that, in truth, the policy being a commercial contract, was to be construed liberally, and the true question was, whether the loss had been fairly incurred. If it had, and it appeared on the record to have so happened, the refusal of the minister and churchwardens was without cause, and therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain their action. But Mr. Justice Heath appeared to differ from the rest of the court, and time was taken to deliberate. Afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiffs, pro forma, as it was understood that a writ of error would be brought, whichever way the judgment should be given. — Upon this writ of error, the court of King's Bench, after two arguments, reversed the judgment of the court of Common Pleas, being unanimously of opinion that the production of the certificate was a condition precedent. — Lord Kenyon said he did not see how the term cy pres was applicable to this subject; that the argument founded on this, went to shew that if none of the inhabitants of this parish would certify, a certificate from the inhabitants of the next, or of any other parish, would have answered the purpose. But he said that the insured could not substitute other terms or conditions in lieu of those which all the parties to the contract had originally made.

(a) Sup. 809.

END OF THE FOURTH BOOK.

APPENDIX.

No. I.

Form of a valued Policy of Insurance upon Ship and Goods, by Private Underwriters.

£.10,000
 _____S.G. } IN the name of God, Amen.
 Delivered the _____ as well in _____ own name
 Day of _____ } as for and in the name and names of all and every other person or persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall, appertain, in part or in all, doth make assurance, and can be _____ and them, and every of them, to be insured, lost or not lost, at and from upon any kind of goods and merchandizes, and also upon the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munition, artillery boat, and other furniture, of and in the good ship or vessel called The _____ whereof is master, under God, for this present voyage _____ or whosoever else shall go for master in the said ship, or by whatsoever other name or names the same ship, or the master thereof, is or shall be named or called: Beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandizes from the loading thereof aboard the said ship _____ upon the said ship, &c.

_____ and so shall continue and endure during her abode there, upon the said ship, &c.:

And further, until the said ship, with all her ordnance, tackle, apparel, &c. and goods and merchandizes whatsoever, shall be arrived at _____ upon the said ship, &c. until she hath moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety, and upon the goods and merchandizes until the same be there discharged and safely landed; And it shall be lawful for the said ship, &c. in this voyage, to proceed and sail to and touch and stay at any ports or places whatsoever _____ without prejudice to this insurance; the said ship, &c. goods and mer-chandizes, &c. for so much as concerns the assureds by agreement between the assureds and assurers, in this policy are and shall be valued at _____ Touching the adventures and perils which we the assurers are contented to bear and do take upon us in this voyage, they are, of

of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of mart and countermart, surprizals, taking at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever, barratry of the matter and mariners, and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes, that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage, of the said goods and merchandizes, and Ship, &c. or any part thereof; and in case of any loss or misfortune it shall be lawful to the assureds, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour and travel, for, in, and about, the defence, safeguard, and recovery, of the said goods and merchandizes, and ship, &c. or any part thereof, without prejudice to this insurance, to the charges whereof we the assurers will contribute each one according to the rate and quantity of his sum herein assured: And it is agreed by us the insurers that this writing or policy of assurance shall be of as much force and effect as the surest writing or policy of assurance heretofore made in Lombard Street, or in the Royal Exchange, or elsewhere in London: And so we the assurers are contented, and do hereby promise and bind ourselves, each one for his own part, our heirs, executors, and goods, to the assureds, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the true performance of the premises, confessing ourselves paid the consideration due unto us for this assurance by the assured at and after the rate of

In witness whereof we the assurers have subscribed our names and sums assured in London.

N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed, are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded; — Sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides, and skins, are warranted free from average under five pounds per cent.; and all other goods, also the ship and freight, are warranted free of average under three pounds per cent. unless general, or the ship be stranded.

No. II.

Form of a Policy of Insurance on Ship and Goods, by the Royal Exchange Assurance Company.

S. G. } S. G. No.
N. } L.

By the Corporation of the Royal Exchange Assurance.

IN the Name of God, Amen.

as well in own name as for and in the name and names of all and every other person or persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall, appertain, in part or in all, doth make assurance,
and causeth and them,
and every of them to be assured, lost or not lost, upon any kind of goods and merchandizes whatsoever, loaden or to be loaden, and also upon the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munition, artillery, boat, and other furniture, of and in the good ship or vessel called The burthen, or thereabouts, whereof is master (under God) for this present voyage or whosoever else shall go for master in the said ship, or by whatsoever other name or names the same ship or the master thereof is or shall be named or called: Beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandizes from and immediately following the loading thereof on board the said ship and upon the said ship, &c. and so shall continue and endure during her abode there upon the said ship, &c. and further until the said ship, with all her ordnance, tackle, apparel, &c. and goods and merchandizes whatsoever, shall be arrived at upon the said ship, &c. until she hath there moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety, and upon the goods and merchandizes, until the same be there discharged and safely landed: And it shall be lawful for the said ship, &c. in this voyage, to proceed and sail to, and touch and stay at, any ports or places whatsoever, without prejudice to this Assurance, the said ship, &c. goods and VOL. 11. Z merchandizes, merchandizes, &c. for so much as concerns the assureds, (by agreement made between the assureds and the said corporation in this policy) are and shall be rated and valued at Sterling, without farther account to be given by the assureds for the same. Touching the adventures and perils which the said corporation are contented to bear and do take upon them in this voyage, they are, of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of mart and countermart, surprizals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints and detainerments of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality, soever, barratry of the master and mariners, and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes, that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage, of the said goods and merchandizes, and ship, &c. or any part thereof: And in case of any loss or misfortune it shall be lawful to the assureds, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel, for, in, and about, the defence, safeguard, and recovery, of the said goods and merchandizes, and ship, &c. (or any part thereof), without prejudice to this assurance, to the charges whereof the said corporation will contribute according to the rate and quantity of the sum herein assured; And it is agreed by the said corporation that this writing or policy of assurance shall be of as much force and effect as the surest writing or policy of assurance heretofore made in Lombard Street, or in the Royal Exchange, or elsewhere in London: And so the said corporation are contented, and do hereby promise and bind themselves and their successors to the assureds, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the true performance of the premises, confessing themselves paid the consideration due unto them for this assurance by at and after the rate of per cent. In witness whereof the said Corporation have caused their common seal to be hereunto affixed, and the sum or sums by them assured to be hereunder written, at their office in the Royal Exchange of London this in the year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord by the grace of God, of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and in the year of our Lord

Day of

The said corporation are content with this assurance for

Free from all average on corn, flour, fish, salt, fruit, seed, hides, and tobacco, unless general, or otherwise specially agreed.

Free from average on sugar, rum, skins, hemp, and flax, under five per cent.; and on all other goods, and on ship, under three per cent., except general.

By order of the Court of Directors.

No. III.

Form of a Policy of Insurance on Ship and Goods by the London Assurance Company.

SHIP AND GOODS.

London Assurance House.

No. No. in London.

By the Governor and Company of the London Assurance.

IN the name of God, Amen.

as well in own name as for and in the name and names of all and every other person or persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall, appertain, in part or in all, doth make assurance, and causeth and them, and every of them, to be assured, lost or not lost, at and from upon any kind of goods and merchandizes whatsoever; and also upon the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munition, artillery, boat, and other furniture, of and in the good ship or vessel called The whereof is master (under God) for this present voyage or whoever else shall go for master in the said ship or vessel, or by whatsoever other name or names the said ship or vessel, or the master thereof, is or shall be named or called: Beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandizes from and immediately following the loading thereof aboard the said ship or vessel at and upon the

the said ship or vessel, &c. and so shall continue and endure during her abode there, upon the said ship or vessel, &c.; and farther, until the said ship or vessel, with all her ordnance, tackle, apparel, &c. and goods and merchandizes whatsoever, shall be arrived at and upon the said ship or vessel, &c. until she hath moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety, and upon the goods and merchandizes, until the same be there safely discharged and landed: And it shall be lawful for the said ship or vessel, &c. in this voyage, to proceed and sail to, and touch and stay at, any ports or places whatsoever without prejudice to this assurance, the said ship or vessel, &c. goods and merchandizes, &c. for so much as concerns the assureds, (by agreement between the assureds and the London assurance), are and shall be rated and valued at without farther or other account to be given by the assureds for the same. Touching the adventures and perils, which the said London assurance are contented to bear and do take upon them in this voyage, they are, of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of mart and countermart, surprizals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever, barratry of the master and mariners, and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes, that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage, of the said goods and merchandizes, and ship or vessel, &c. or any part thereof: And in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the assureds, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel, for, in, and about, the defence, safeguard, and recovery, of the said goods, merchandizes, and ship or vessel, &c. or any part thereof, without prejudice to this assurance, to the charges whereof the said London assurance will contribute according to the rate and quantity of the sum herein assured: And it is agreed that this writing or policy of assurance shall be of as much force and effect as the surest writing or policy of assurance heretofore made in Lombard Street, or in the Royal Exchange or elsewhere in London: And so the said London assurance are contented, and do hereby promise and bind themselves and their successors to the assureds, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the true performance of the premises, confessing themselves paid the consideration due unto them for this assurance by the assured, at and after the rate of per cent. In witness whereof the said said London assurance have caused their common seal to be here-unto affixed, and the sum or sums by them assured to be hereunder written, at their office in London, this day of in the year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord by the grace of God, of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and in the year of our Lord

Free from all average on corn, flour, fruit, fish, salt; and seeds, except general.

Free from average on sugar, rum, hides, skins, hemp, flax, and tobacco, under five pounds per cent.; and on all other goods, and ship, under three pounds per cent. except general.

The said governor and company are content with this assurance for

No. IV.

Form of a Bill of Bottomry, by deed poll, where the Ship is to go to several Ports.

TO ALL PEOPLE, &c. I A. B. of, &c. mariner, master, and part owner of the good ship or vessel called, &c. of London, of the burthen of two hundred tons, or thereabouts, now riding at anchor in the river Thames, within the port of London, do send greeting ; WHEREAS the said ship is now bound out upon a voyage from the said port unto the island of Barbadoes, and from thence, if occasion shall be, to the island of May, and so to return back again to the said island of Barbadoes, and thence to London, to end her voyage ; Now KNOW YE, that I the said A. B. for myself, my executors and administrators, do covenant and grant, to and with C. D. of &c. (who, before the sealing and delivery hereof, hath paid and advanced unto me the said A. B. the sum of 500*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, and is contented and hath agreed to stand to, and bear the adventure of the said sum upon the body of the said ship, during the said voyage), and to and with the executors, administrators, and assigns of the said C. D. by these presents ; That the said ship, with the first good wind and weather after the day of next ensuing the date hereof, shall depart from the said river Thames, on the said intended voyage, and shall by God's grace, (the perils and dangers of the sea, and restraint of princes and rulers excepted), return into the said river Thames from her said voyage before the expiration of fourteen months, to be accounted from the date of these presents ; and that the said ship, in her said intended voyage, shall not sail or apply unto any other ports or places than those before mentioned herein, unless she shall be necessitated thereto, by extremity of weather, or other unavoidable accident. And that I the said A. B. my executors, administrators, or assigns, shall and will well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators, or assigns, at, &c. the sum of 560*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, in respect of the adventure aforesaid, if the said ship shall go only to the island of Barbadoes, and from thence return to London to finish her said intended voyage ; and the sum of 600*l.* of like money, if if the said ship shall go from thence to the island of May, and so return again to the said island of Barbadoes, and thence to London to end her said voyage; and that within one month after the return of the hull or body of the said ship unto the river Thames, from her said voyage. PROVIDED ALWAYS, and it is nevertheless the true intent and meaning of these presents, That if the said ship, in her intended voyage, shall happen to be lost, miscarry, or be taken by men of war, or pirates, that then this present writing or deed, and every covenant, payment, matter, and thing therein contained, on the part and behalf of me the said A. B. to be done, paid, and performed, shall be void and of none effect: And that then I the said A. B. my executors or administrators, shall not be anywise chargeable or liable to pay the said several sums before mentioned, or either of them, or any part thereof, to the said C. D. his executors, administrators, or assigns, but that he and they are to lose the same, and every part thereof; any thing herein-before contained to the contrary thereof, in anywise notwithstanding. AND it is agreed, by and between the said parties to these presents, that in case the said ship shall not be returned unto the river Thames, from the said intended voyage, at the end of fourteen months, to be accounted from the date of these presents; and that, at the expiration of the said fourteen months, there shall not be just proof made of the loss happening within the time aforesaid; that then, I the said A. B. my executors, administrators, or assigns, shall and will, within twenty days next after the end and expiration of the said fourteen months, well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators, or assigns, at the place of payment aforesaid, the said sum of 560 l. in case the said ship shall go unto the said island of Barbadoes as aforesaid, and the said sum of 600 l. in case the said ship shall go unto the said island of May as aforesaid; and that the said C. D. shall not run the hazard and adventure of the said sum by him adventured as aforesaid, upon the body of the said ship, any longer than fourteen months, to be reckoned and accounted as aforesaid. In witness, &c.

No. V.

Form of a Respondentia Bond, upon an East India Voyage.

KNOW ALL MEN by these presents, that I, A. B. of _____ in the county of _____, mariner, am held and firmly bound to C. D. of, &c. in the sum or penalty of 1,000*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said C. D. or to his certain attorney, executors, administrators, or assigns, to which payment, well and truly to be made, I the said A. B. do bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators firmly, by these presents, sealed with my seal, DATED this 23d day of January, in the forty-second year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the third, by the grace of God, of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and in the year of our Lord 1802.

WHEREAS the above-named C. D. on the day of the date above written, advanced and lent unto the said A. B. the sum of 500*l.* upon the goods, merchandize, and effects laden and to be laden on board the good ship or vessel called The Saint George, now riding at anchor in the river Thames outward bound, and whereof one E. F. is commander Now THE CONDITION of this obligation is such, that if the said ship or vessel do and shall, with all convenient speed, proceed and sail from and out of the said river Thames, on a voyage to any port or place, ports or places, in the East Indies, China, Persia, or elsewhere beyond the Cape of Good Hope; and from thence do and shall sail, return, and come back into the said river Thames, at or before the end and expiration of 36 calendar months, to be accounted from the day of the date above written, and there to end her said intended voyage, (the dangers and casualties of the seas excepted); AND if the said A. B. his heirs, executors, or administrators, do and shall within thirty days next after the said ship or vessel shall be returned to the said port of London, from her said intended voyage, or at and upon the end and expiration of the said thirty six calendar months, to be accounted as aforesaid, (which of the said times shall first and next happen), well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators, administrators, or assigns, the full sum of 500*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, together with the sum of 12 l. of like lawful money per kalendar month, for each and every kalendar month ; and so proportionably for a greater or less time than a kalendar month for all such time, and so many kalendar months as shall be elapsed and run out of the said thirty-six kalendar months, over and above twenty kalendar months, to be accounted from the day of the date above written ; Or if, in the said voyage, and within the said thirty-six kalendar months to be accounted as aforesaid, an utter loss of the said ship or vessel by fire, enemies, men of war, or any other casualties, shall unavoidably happen, and the said A. B. his heirs, executors, or administrators, do and shall, within six kalendar months next after such loss, well and truly account for (upon oath if required), and pay unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators, or assigns, a just and proportionable average on all the goods and effects of the said A. B. carried from England on board the said ship or vessel, and the net proceeds thereof, and on all other goods and effects which the said A. B. shall acquire during the said voyage, for or by reason of such goods, merchandizes, and effects, and which shall not be unavoidably lost ; then the above written obligation to be void and of none effect, else to stand in full force and virtue.

A. B. (L. S.)

Sealed and delivered,
(being first duly stamped)
In the presence of

No. VI.

Form of a Policy of Insurance upon a Life, for the Life of the insured, by the SOCIETY FOR EQUITABLE ASSURANCES UPON LIVES.

THIS PRESENT INSTRUMENT OR POLICY OF INSURANCE, witnesseth, that whereas A. B. of _____ in the county of _____ hath entered into and become a member of the society for EQUITABLE ASSURANCES ON lives and survivorships, according to a certain deed of settlement bearing date the seventh day of September, which was in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-two, and inrolled in his majesty's court of King's Bench at Westminster; and whereas the said society, relying upon the truth of a certain declaration, dated this _____ day of _____ made and signed by the said A. B. touching the age, state of health, and other circumstances attending the said A. B. have assured to the said A. B. the sum of _____ pounds, to be paid to his executors, administrators, or assigns, after the decease of the said A. B. whensoever the same shall happen; provided the said assured does not exceed the age of _____ years on this _____ day of _____ has had the small-pox, and is not afflicted with any disorder which tends to the shortening of life, (as in the said declaration more fully is set forth), at and under the annual sum or premium of _____

And whereas the said assured hath executed the covenants usually entered into by members of the said society, and hath paid such premium for one whole year, commencing from the date of these presents: Now we, whose names are hereunto subscribed, and seals affixed, being two of the trustees of the said society, do, for ourselves, and our assigns, trustees of the said society, covenant, promise, and agree, to and with the said assured, and the executors, administrators, and assigns of the said assured, that if the said assured, or the assigns of the said assured, shall yearly and every year, during the term of this assurance, continue to pay to the trustees of the said society,

society, or to any two or more of them, the annual sum or premium aforesaid, on or before the day of in every year ; and shall observe, perform, fulfil, and keep all and singular the covenants, articles, clauses, provisos, conditions, and agreements, which on the part and behalf of the said assured, are and ought to be observed, performed, fulfilled, and kept, according to the true intent and meaning of the said deed of settlement : We, or our assigns, trustees of the said society for the time being, will or shall, within six kalendar months, after satisfactory proof shall have been made of the death of the said assured, well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, out of the stock or fund of the said society, unto the executors, administrators, or assigns, of the said assured, the full sum so hereby assured : Provided always, and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of this policy of assurance, and the same is accepted by the said assured upon these express conditions, that in case the said assured shall die upon the seas, or shall go beyond the limits of Europe, unless license be obtained from the court of directors, or shall die by his own hands, or by the hands of justice ; or if the age of the said assured does exceed years ; or if the said assured be now afflicted with any disorder which tends to the shortening of life ; or if the above-mentioned declaration contains any untrue averment, this policy shall be void.

In witness, &c.

No. VII.

Form of a Policy of Insurance against Fire.

By the Corporation of the Royal Exchange Assurance of Houses and Goods from Fire.

THIS present instrument or policy of assurance witnesseth, that whereas A. B. hath agreed to pay into the treasury of the corporation of the Royal Exchange, London, for the assurance of from loss or damage by fire. Now know all men by these presents, That the capital stock, estate, and securities of the said corporation shall be subject and liable to pay, make good, and satisfy unto the said assured, his heirs, executors, or administrators, any loss or damage which shall or may happen by fire to the said goods aforesaid, (except such goods as hemp, flax, tallow, pitch, tar, turpentine, glass, china, and earthen wares, writings, books of accounts, notes, bills, bonds, tallies, ready money, jewels, plate, pictures, gun-powder, hay, straw, and corn unthreshed), within the space of twelve calendar months from the day of the date of this instrument or policy of assurance, not exceeding the sum of and shall so continue, remain, and be subject and liable, as aforesaid, from year to year, to be computed from the day of in every year, for so long time as the said assured shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, the sum of into the treasury of the said corporation, on or before the day of which shall be in each succeeding year, and the said corporation shall agree thereto by accepting and receiving the same; which said loss or damage shall be paid in money immediately after the same shall be settled and adjusted; or otherwise, if the said loss or damage shall not be adjusted, settled, and paid within sixty days after notice thereof shall be given to the said corporation, by the said assured, that then the said corporation, their officers, workmen, or assigns, shall, at the charge of the said corporation, at the end and expiration of the said sixty days, provide and supply the said assured with the like quantity of goods of the same sort and kind, and of equal value and goodness with those burnt or damaged damned by fire. Provided always nevertheless, and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of this deed or policy, that the said stock, estate, and securities of the said corporation shall not be subject or liable to pay or make good to the assured any loss or damage by fire which shall happen by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever. Provided also, that this deed or policy shall not take place or be binding to the said corporation, until the premium for one year is paid, or in case the said assured shall have already made, or shall hereafter make any other assurance upon the goods aforesaid, unless the same shall be allowed of and specified upon the back of this policy: Or if the said A. B. at the time when any such fire shall happen, shall be in the possession of, or let to any person who shall use or exercise therein the trade of a sugar-baker, apothecary, chemist, colour man, distiller, bread or biscuit baker, ship or tallow chandler, stable keeper, innholder, or maltster, or shall be made use of for the stowing or keeping of hemp, flax, tallow, pitch, tar, or turpentine; but that in all or any of the said cases these presents, and every clause, article, and thing, herein contained, shall cease, determine, and be utterly void and of none effect, or otherwise shall remain in full force and virtue. In witness whereof, the said corporation have caused their common seal to be hereunto affixed, the day of in the year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord by the grace of God, of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred

N. B. This policy to be of no force if assigned, unless such assignment be allowed by an entry thereof in the books of the company.

No. VIII.

Cases, reported too late to be inserted in their proper Places.

Tisger v. Prescott, 5 Esp. Rep. 184.

The insurance of neutral property, provided it contravenes no policy of the State, will be good, though the court of Admiralty pronounce that there was good cause for the seizure of it, but order it to be restored.

GOODS, the property of persons at Leghorn, were insured on board the Fox, from New York to Gibraltar.—In an action to recover for a loss by capture, it appeared that the Fox sailed from New York on the 1st of June 1803 for Leghorn, with orders for the captain to touch at Gibraltar for information on the subject of war between England and France; and if, on his arrival at that place, such a war existed, and he could not proceed to Leghorn, he was then to sail to Genoa, Naples, or Palermo; that at the time of the ship's sailing from New York, and at the time of the capture, Leghorn was garrisoned by French troops; that on the 12th of July, the Fox was captured by a British ship of war, and carried into Gibraltar, where the Vice Admiralty Court, after restoring the Fox, and all the cargo, except the goods insured, stated: 'That, as it appeared doubtful, under all the circumstances, whether the property of the inhabitants of Leghorn was liable to be treated indiscriminately as the property of citizens of the French republic, the judge reserved the final adjudication of the goods in question for six months for further information respecting such doubts, pronounced for just cause of seizure of the ship and goods, directed freight to be paid to the captain, and the captor's expences to be charged on the goods so reserved.' That on the 20th of August, a commission issued for the unloading and sale of the goods, and on the 14th of February 1804, a final decree was made directing the value of the goods to be restored to the owners, subjects of the king of Etruria, and pronounced for just cause of seizure.—It was objected that, as it appeared by the provisional and final sentences, that there was a just cause of seizure, this action could not be maintained, for though the underwriters insure against capture generally, yet this cannot extend to captures for just cause by a British ship, according to the doctrine laid down in Kellner v. Le Mesurier (a)—But Lord Ellenborough, who tried the cause, said, that when the Vice Admiralty Court pronounced for just cause of seizure, it did not adjudge that the goods insured were condemnable; that this was a capture of neutral property, the insurance of which contravened no policy of the state, which constituted the principal difference between this case, and that which had been cited.

(a) Sup. 675.

An insurance was made by the captain of a ship in the African slave trade, "on his commissions, privileges, &c. as "may be hereafter valued."—It appeared that the insured, besides his wages, was entitled, for his trouble in purchasing slaves on the coast of Africa, and disposing of them again in the West Indies, to 2*l.* per cent. on the gross sales, and 4*l.* for every 100*l.*, after deducting the above 2*l.* per cent. and the privileges and commissions of the other officers.—It was objected that the commissions and privileges of the insured, being in the nature of wages, the policy was void, within the authority of the case of Webster v. De Tasset (a)—But the court determined that the rule which prohibited the insurance of the wages of the mariners did not apply to the captain; and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

King v. Glover,
2 N. R. 206.

The commissions and privileges of the captain of a ship in the African slave trade may be insured.

In this case, the only question was, whether rice was corn, within the meaning of the usual memorandum.—On the trial, the usage was proved to be against its being so considered.—The court held, that the common sense of the words ought to decide, unless a clear usage to the contrary were shewn; and that here the usage accorded with the plain sense of the words, to shew that rice was not intended to be exempted from partial loss (b).

Scott v. Burdillon, 2 N. R. 213.

Rice is not corn within the meaning of the common memorandum.

(a) Sup. 90.

(b) Vid. Mason v. Skurray, sup. 226.

Thelluson and others v. Sheddin,
2 N. R. 228.

In an action for a partial loss, upon a capture and re-capture, the plaintiff must produce the proceedings of the Admiralty Court to shew the amount of the salvage and expences for which the underwriters are liable.

In an action on a policy on goods from Jamaica to London to recover for a loss by capture, it appeared that the ship, on her voyage, was captured, and the next day re-captured and brought back to Jamaica, where, no person claiming on behalf of the insured, the Admiralty court ordered a sale to pay the salvage and expences.—The proceedings in this court were not proved by the plaintiffs, but credit was given to the underwriters for the sum received out of court by the agent of the insured, and the difference only between that sum and the invoice price of the cargo was claimed.—It was objected that the plaintiffs could not recover for this partial loss without duly proving the proceedings in the court of Admiralty, by which alone the amount of the partial loss could be ascertained.—But Sir James Mansfield, C. J. who tried the cause, overruled this objection, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff for the partial loss.—Upon a motion to set this verdict aside, and grant a new trial, the court were of opinion that, though a capture simply proved, be evidence of a total loss, and the reducing of it to a partial loss might be said to come in by way of defence; yet, that, where the plaintiff in the same breath proves a capture and re-capture, there is an end of the total loss, and he can only claim as for a partial loss, in which case he could legally make out this claim only by the production of the proceedings of the Admiralty court, which had fixed the amount of the salvage and expences to which the underwriters were liable.

Beckwith v. Sydenham,
1 Camp. 116.

A witness who has never seen the ship, may be examined, to shew that, according to the statement of another witness, who had examined her, she was, or was not, sea-worthy.—A letter from which it might be inferred that a ship, in a foreign port might

In an action on a policy on a ship, “at and from Pisou in Nova Scotia to Liverpool,” it appeared that the ship arrived at Pisou on the 10th of May 1803, and having sailed on the voyage insured on the 2d of September, met with stormy weather, and was obliged to put into Halifax on the 9th of October, so disabled as to be unfit to prosecute the voyage.—It was objected that the ship when she sailed from Pisou was not sea-worthy; and, to make this out, a deposition of a man who surveyed her on her arrival at Halifax, and who described a great many deficiencies he discovered in her, was read. It was then proposed to call some eminent surveyors of ships, who had never seen the ship in question, to prove that a ship in the state described in the deposition, could not have been sea-worthy on the 2d of September.—It was objected, that this would be asking the opinion of witnesses, on an ex parte statement, which might be false.—But Lord Ellenborough, who tried the cause, overruled the objection, upon the ground that the jury might be assisted in matters of skill and science by the opinion of persons particularly conversant with the subject.—Another ground of defence was, that before the policy was effected, a letter had been received from the captain of the ship, dated at Pisou the 11th of May, in which he stated the damage the ship had sustained on the outward voyage, and describing her as being unsea-worthy and in need of great repairs, which letter ought to have been communicated to the underwriters, as it would have shewn that the ship must be detained a much longer time than would be necessary to take in her cargo; which would have the effect of turning a summer risk into a winter one.—But Lord Ellenborough held, that if it were necessary to disclose this letter, as indicating the time when the ship might fail, it would in all cases be necessary to inform the underwriters where any repairs are wanting; that if they wished for information on this subject, they might have asked for it; and if they would only insure a voyage during a particular season, they ought to require a warranty that the ship should sail by a certain day; and therefore that the communication of the letter was as little necessary to shew the probable stay of the ship at Pisou, as to shew whether she was sea-worthy at the commencement of the voyage.

be detained by the want of repairs, need not be communicated to the underwriters.

In an action on a policy on the ship Ganges and her stores, to and from the Southern Whale fishery, with liberty to seek, join, and exchange convoys, it appeared that the ship sailed from the Downs under convoy of the Fury sloop of war, on the 12th of December 1805 for Portsmouth, and in her passage was captured.—The defence was, that a letter from the captain, dated the 5th of December, stating that he was to sail under convoy of the Fury, and received on the 6th, had not been communicated to the underwriters before effecting the policy, which was not till the 12th or 13th of January, the broker merely saying, that the ship had sailed about three weeks.—To this two answers were given; 1st, that the defendant on the 12th of March 1806, after reading this letter, together with several others from the captain, while a prisoner in France, giving a full account of all the circumstances of the case, had adjusted the policy as for a total loss, which it was contended was conclusive; and 2dly, that the letter itself was not material.—Lord Ellenborough, b.

Herbert v. Champsons, 1 Campb. 134

An adjustment signed even upon a full disclosure of all facts, is not conclusive.

who tried the cause, said,—“ There are two questions here to be considered ; as to the conclusiveness of the adjustment, and as to the materiality of the letter. The cases are clearly distinguishable, where, upon a dispute, the money is paid, and where there is only a promise to pay. If the money be actually paid, it cannot be recovered back, without proof of fraud ; but a promise to pay will not, in general, be binding, unless founded on a previous liability (a). An adjustment is an admission, on the supposition of the truth of certain facts stated, that the insured is entitled to recover on the policy. Perhaps, if properly stamped, it might be declared on as a promissory instrument. Here it is a mere admission, and there is no consideration for the promise it is supposed to prove. An underwriter must make a strong case, after admitting his liability ; but, until he has paid the money, he is at liberty to avail himself of any defence which the facts or the law of the case will furnish.” 2dly, Respecting the letter, his lordship directed the jury to consider whether it would have had the effect of inducing the underwriters to regard the Ganges as a missing ship, and require an increased premium ; or, whether it might not have excited their curiosity, or led them to some useful information.—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Raine v. Bell,
9 East 195.

A ship may trade, where she has liberty to touch, without express permission, provided this occasion no delay, deviation, or additional risk.

The ship Rio Nova and freight were insured “ From her loading port or ports on the coast of Spain to London, with liberty to touch and stay at any port or place whatsoever, without being deemed a deviation.”—It appeared that by the long continuance of the voyage from port to port in Spain, and the difficulty of obtaining provisions on the coast at that time, the ship's provisions ran very short, which obliged her to put into Gibraltar for a supply ; that while the ship lay there for that purpose the captain received on board some chests of dollars on freight, but that this occasioned no delay beyond that which was justified by the necessity.—In an action to recover for a loss by the perils of the sea off the coast of Cornwall, in the home-ward voyage, it was objected on the part of the underwriters on the authority of Stitt v. Wardell, and Sheriff v. Potts, that the taking in of the additional cargo of dollars at Gibraltar, where there was no liberty to trade, avoided the policy.—But the court determined that as this occasioned no delay, nor any increase or alteration of the risk, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.—Mr. Justice Lawrence, in delivering his opinion, seemed to question the authority of Stitt v. Wardell.—Mr. Justice Le Blanc said, “That the reason why a liberty is sometimes expressly reserved for a ship to touch, stay, and trade, in the course of the voyage, is not because this is impliedly excluded in every policy in which no such liberty is reserved, but to justify the delay in trading there; and that, where no delay is occasioned by the trading, he could see no reason why the court should imply a condition which the parties had not made.”

(a) The adjustment has been holden to amount to prima facie evidence of all the facts which constitute a previous liability, subject to be impeached by fraud, or misconception of the law or fact. Vid. sup. b. r. c. 14. § 3. where the effect of an adjustment is discussed at large.

A liberty to trade is given, only to justify the delay, not to authorize the trade.

A policy, dated the 4th of August 1803, was effected on a quantity of oil, the property of the plaintiff, an American citizen, resident there, “At and from New York to Havre de Grace,” on board the Hannah, an American ship, duly documented. The ship sailed on the 4th of July 1803, and in the course of her voyage was arrested on the 17th and sent into Bristol, where she arrived on the 30th. The Court of Admiralty, on the 8th of October, ordered the ship and cargo to be restored, subject to freight and expences, but without costs or damages; except a box of books, some bark, and some whalebone, which were condemned as French property. The agents of the insured abandoned the oil in question on the 14th of October. They were apprized of the detention of the vessel and the suit in the Admiralty soon after they respectively took place; but were not parties to the suit, nor did they know of the restoration of the ship and cargo till the 17th of October, three days after the abandonment. On the 6th of September, the British Government declared Havre de Grace to be in a state of blockade. The captain of the Hannah refused to proceed to Havre, and returned to New York, leaving the oil at Bristol, where it was sold by agreement without prejudice to the question; and the loss amounted to 45*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* per cent. of which the freight and expences of restoration amounted to 20*l.* 19*s.* per cent.—Upon Barker v. Blake, 9 East 283.

Quantity of oil, the property of a neutral on board a neutral ship, is insured from a neutral to an enemy's port. The ship is arrested and brought to England, having enemy's goods on board. The ship and cargo are restored, except the enemy's goods, which are condemned.—The port to which the oil was destined is afterwards put under blockade, so that the ship cannot proceed thither.—The insurance was legal; the seizure and detention amounted to a loss of the voyage, and would entitle the insured to a total loss:— But an abandonment, five weeks after the blockade had rendered the further prosecution of the voyage impracticable, was out of time, and the insured, therefore, entitled to a partial loss only.

this case it was objected on the part of the underwriters, 1st, That the loss did not arise from any risk within the policy; for, as some of the goods were enemies' property, the detention was lawful; and that the policy did not protect the insured against the effects of a lawful Briefish capture or detention. 2dly, That, supposing the plaintiff entitled to recover any thing, it could only be a partial loss, the abandonment being out of time.—The Court determined, 1st, That the mere act of carrying enemies' goods on board was no breach of neutrality; that the American was at liberty to pursue his commerce with France, and to be the carrier of goods for French subjects, at the risk, indeed, of having his voyage interrupted by the goods being seized, or the vessel itself detained; that the indemnity sought was not secured by the policy to an enemy, or to a neutral forfeiting his neutrality; but to a neutral, as such, against the consequences of an act justifiably done in the exercise of his neutral rights, and as justifiably controlled on our part, in the exercise of our belligerent rights against enemies' property found on board; and that the voyage and the commerce in which the vessel was engaged not being of an hostile description, nor in any manner forbidden by the law or policy of this country, there was no ground for the first objection. 2dly, That the loss of the voyage, (the only description of loss that could be contended for in this case) was occasioned by the detention in question, which continued till after the blockade, which rendered the further prosecution of the voyage impracticable, took place, would have entitled the insured to recover as for a total loss, if he had abandoned in due time: but that the abandonment on the 16th of October, above five weeks after the blockade of Havre (the latest event to which the loss of the voyage could be referred) had been publicly notified, was not in due time; and that, therefore, the amount of the loss must be restricted to 20*l.* 19*s.* per cent. the amount of the freight and expenses, to which the insured was subjected by the sentence of the Court of Admiralty.

Norvill v. St. Barbe, 2 N. R. 34

A ship is licensed by the India Company for three

The ship Venus was insured " At and from the Cape of Good Hope to Botany Bay, Port Jackson, and all other ports " and places in New South Wales, &c. and all places beyond " Cape Horn, the East Indies, Persia, China, the north-west " coast of America, and to all places whatsoever after her departure.

"parture from the Cape of Good Hope, and at all times, until her safe arrival and final discharge at Canton; with leave to sell, resell, &c. and to load, unload, &c. at any port or place, without inquiring into the regularity of her proceedings, and to continue until her arrival as above; with leave to touch and trade at all ports and places in the East Indies, Persia, and China, in whatever latitude or longitude, particularly between Cape Horn and Kamskatka, and all islands, after her departure from Botany Bay; and, after her final discharge, "on her homeward voyage to England." (a)—A licence was obtained from the East India Company, dated the 29th of October 1800, for the said ship, for a voyage into the Pacific Ocean, to sell her cargo on the north-west coast of America, and from thence to Japan, Koma, and Canton, and there dispose of her cargo, obtained on the north-west coast of America, and remit the proceeds through the Company's treasury to London, and then return to England; but not to touch at any place in China but Canton, with a proviso that it should not authorize the Venus to continue within the Company's limits for more than three years. The Venus arrived at Botany Bay in October 1801, from whence she sailed to Otaheite for a cargo of pork, with which she returned to Botany Bay, and again sailed from thence in February 1803, but was never heard of more.—Upon the trial it was objected on the part of the defendant that it was evident from the date of the ship's leaving Botany Bay the second time, that the voyage described in the licence and the policy had been abandoned, and that therefore the underwriters were discharged—Sir James Mansfield, C. J., who tried the cause, left it to the jury to consider whether it was possible for the ship, after leaving Botany Bay the second time, to go to the north-west coast of America, from thence to Canton, and from thence out of the Company's limits, on her return to England, within the three years limited by the licence.—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.—Upon a motion for a new trial, it was contended, on the part of the defendant, that, in the case of a deviation, the terminus ad quem remains, but the course thither is changed; but that, where the terminus ad quem is changed, it is not a deviation, but an abandonment of years to take a cargo to the Pacific Ocean, and the north-west coast of America, there to trade and purchase a new cargo, to sail therewith to Canton, and there dispose thereof, and remit the proceeds to England through the Company's treasury; The ship sails to Botany Bay, from thence to Otaheite returns to Botany Bay, and sails again from thence, but is never heard of after.—Though she was considered as having abandoned all intention of proceeding to Canton, this was not an abandonment of the voyage, which still continued legal, though the whole voyage described in the licence, became impracticable, and the underwriters were held liable.

(a) This is a short abstract of the farago of words in which the voyage in this most singular policy was described.

the voyage ; and that such an abandonment, at whatever time it takes place, whether before or after the arrival of the ship at the dividing point, discharges the underwriters. That in this case, the terminus ad quem was Canton, and this being abandoned, the terms of the licence were violated. But the court determined that the verdict should stand. They held, that if it should happen that the ship, could not, by the disposal of her cargo, raise funds to purchase furs or other goods on the north-west coast of America, or in the Pacific Ocean, to make it worth while to go to Canton, there was nothing in the licence from which it must of necessity be implied that she was to go to Canton at all events.

GENERAL INDEX.

ABANDONMENT.	Page.
Nature of	559
Whether coeval with insurance	ib.
Probable origin of	560
Whether carried too far	ib.
In what cases it may be	562, 580
Upon what principle	ib.
When permitted in France	ib.
Upon capture and arrest	563
When it may be	ib. 564, 5, 836
It may be upon an arrest or embargo by a friendly power	564
But not upon a small temporary hindrance	569
When prevented by recapture	565
When not	566, 568
A capture does not necessarily make a total loss, nor recapture prevent it	565, 579
The insured is not obliged to abandon	564, 570
Upon a wager the insured cannot abandon	564
Whether a loss be total or not depends on the final event	565, 571
The jus post liminii continues for-ever	573
The insured cannot, by abandoning, turn a partial into a total loss	570, 583
Nor can he abandon but while it is a total loss	571, 574
Nor after the ship's arrival, unless the voyage be lost	572
He cannot abandon five weeks after a blockade had rendered the further prosecution of the voyage impracticable	836
While the ship is in the enemy's hands it is a total loss	573
But

ABANDONMENT—continued.

Page.

Upon capture and arrest.

But the property reverts upon a recapture	- 573
There is no vested right to a total loss till abandonment	- 575
If the ship be recovered after a long detention, it is not a total loss, even on a wager policy	- ib.
When the ship is safe, and the voyage not lost, the insured cannot abandon	- 577
If, upon a recapture, the captain sell the ship and cargo, as being the best for all concerned, yet the insured may abandon	- 578
If the captain purchase from the recaptors, the sum paid is only a partial loss	- 581
But the money paid on such purchase cannot be charged to the underwriters, being a ransom	596, 598

In other cases	- 582
Shipwreck is prima facie a total loss	- ib.
But a stranding, of itself, is not so	- ib.
No injury, however great, is a total loss, if the ship arrive	- 583
Or survive the term insured	- 584
But whenever the voyage is lost, the insured may abandon	- 585
As where a ship cannot be repaired, or another procured	- ib.
Or where the cargo is reduced in value to less than the freight	- 587

Within what time it may be	- 589
In foreign countries	- ib.
In England	- ib.
At what time the notice must be given	ib. 592, 835, 6
Effect of neglecting to abandon	590, 592
Till notice of the loss, the captain's acts will not prejudice the right to abandon	- 592
When the captain shall be deemed the agent of the underwriters	- ib.
What act of the insured will preclude his right to abandon	- 593
He must make his election speedily	594, 836
He must not first treat the loss as partial , and then abandon	- ib.
The insurers requiring an abandonment of too much, will not excuse the want of an abandonment	- 595

If

ABANDONMENT—continued.

Page.

Within what time it may be.

If, in the case of a total loss, the underwriters prevent an abandonment, they must pay a total loss - 598

When the insured may abandon upon a presumed loss - - - - - 599

Form of - - - - - ib.

There must be some notice of it - - - ib. 600

There is no particular form of it - - - 599

It must be explicit - - - - - ib.

And unconditional - - - - - 601

And not for part - - - - - 600

When a particular article may be abandoned - ib.

Effect of - - - - - 601

How it transfers the property - - - ib.

To what time it relates - - - - - ib.

Whether the abandonment of a ship transfers the freight - - - - - 602

It can only be in proportion to the sum insured, 603, 603

What shall be the concurrent claims of insurers, and borrowers on bottomry - - - ib.

The underwriters, and not the lender, on bottomry, have the legal title - - - - - 608

To whom the freight earned after abandonment shall belong, where ship and freight are separately insured, and separately abandoned 604, 605, 607, 608

If there be a policy on ship and cargo, and a separate one on each, how the claims of the different sets of underwriters shall be ascertained - 609

What shall be the claim of the underwriters, where the insured receives compensation after abandonment - - - - - 611

Or where the ship arrives safe - - - - ib.

Or the thing insured is recovered - - - ib.

In such case, the insured is not bound to take it back 612

Abandonment once made and accepted is irrevocable 613

But if it be not upon a sufficient ground, it will be void - - - - - ib.

Disposal of the effects abandoned - - - 614

Duty of the insured to save all in his power - ib.

Duty of the captain and sailors - - - 615

The captain's power over the things saved - - ib.

When he shall be deemed the agent of either party - ib.

ABANDON-

	Page.
ABANDONMENT (of the voyage.)
What shall be	- 615
What not	837
ACCEPTANCE OF BILLS.
When this will constitute an insurable interest	- 308
ACTION.
As to the form of action on a policy of insurance,
Vid. Proceedings (Declaration) .
ADJUSTMENT OF LOSSES.
What	- 617
What shall be deemed a fair indemnity	- 648
How the quantity of damage is ascertained	618
Upon a valued policy	- ib.
Upon an open one	- ib.
Where the loss consists of an entire individual	- 619
Where part of the goods are saved	- ib.
Where all are damaged	- 619
Where only one of several articles insured is put in risk	ib.
Where the policy is free of average under so much
per cent.	- ib.
How the loss shall be appreciated	- ib.
What is deemed the true value of a thing	- ib.
The first price is not always the true value	- 621
Different modes of appreciating a loss	- ib.
How goods shall be valued in settling an average	- ib.
How this is done in France	- ib.
How in England	- 622
The insurer is not to be involved in the rise or fall of the market, or the course of exchange	- ib. 628
How a ship shall be valued	- 623
How damage to goods shall be appreciated	- ib.
The rule is the same in a rising or falling market	- 626
What is the measure of indemnity secured by the
policy	- 628
The amount of the loss ought not to depend on after speculations	- 629
The relative prices of sound and damaged goods must be taken from the gross produce, not from the net proceeds	- ib.
The computation must be made upon the real interest, not the value	- 631
	The

ADJUSTMENT OF LOSSES—continued. Page.

Effect of	-	-	-	632
It is prima facie evidence against the underwriter	-	-	-	ib.
This rule objected to	-	-	-	633
Vindicated	-	-	-	ib.
But the claim may be impeached after adjustment	-	-	-	634
An adjustment is not conclusive, though made upon	-	-	-
a full disclosure of all facts	-	-	-	833
An adjustment may be given in evidence in an action	-	-	- on the policy	-	-	-	639
How the claims of different sets of underwriters shall	-	-	- be adjusted upon an abandonment	-	-	-	609

ADMIRALTY.

Vid. Cour. of Admiralty.

ADMISSIONS.

The necessity of mutual admissions in actions on commercial questions	-	-	-	703
-----------------------------------------------------------------------	---	---	---	-----

AGE.

Warranty of	-	-	-	769
Vid. Lives (Insurance upon.)

AGENT.

Where he may insure in his own right	-	115, 310
His authority	-	296
A ship's husband, as such, is not an agent, so as to enable him to insure	-	297
In what cases an agent is bound to insure for his principal	-	ib.
In what cases an action will lie against him for negligence	-	ib.
He is liable, if he limit the broker to too small a premium	-	298
Even a voluntary agent is liable	-	ib.
An agent is liable if he do not furnish the broker with all his instructions	-	299
How the principal shall recover in an action against an agent	-	ib.
Duty of an agent as to representations made to the underwriters	-	451
Any fraud or concealment by him will avoid the policy though the insured be innocent	-	300
But if he act in the usual manner it is sufficient	-	ib.
He

AGENT — continued .	Page.
He ought not to be an underwriter -	- 301
If he pretend that he effected a policy, trover will lie against him for it, and the loss recovered -	- ib.
A general Agent may insure without a particular order -	- 218
Where the master shall be deemed the agent of either party, Vid. Abandonment (Disposal of effects) .
When a general agent may insure in his own name, Vid. Policy (Form—Name of insured) .
What shall be sufficient proof of the authority of an agent to underwrite for his principal -	- 707

ALIEN.

When a natural-born British subject may become a citizen of a foreign state for the purposes of trade - 71

ALIEN ENEMY.

Vid. Enemy.

AMERICA.

Discovery of - 13
 How the trade between the Americans and the British settlements in India is regulated, Vid. Voyage (illegality of).

ANIMALS (death of).

When a loss within the policy - 555
 Vid. Loss (By the death of animals).

APPORTIONMENT.

When the premium may be apportioned, Vid. Return of Premium (Risk not commenced).

ARBITRATION.

Vid. Proceedings (In what courts).

ARMED NEUTRALITY.

Vid. Northern Confederacy,—Warranty, (Neutrality).

ARREST OF PRINCES.

Vid. Loss (By detention of princes).

ASSIGNMENT (of fire policy).

How made, Vid. Fire, (Insurance against).

	Page.
"AT AND FROM."
How these words are construed, Vid. Risk, (duration of) .
Under a policy " at and from " an island, the ship is protected from port to port in the island	- 358
AVERAGE.
Vid. Loss (By average contributions) .
AVERMENT.
Of interest, vid. Proceedings (Declaration) .
Of loss, vid. ib.
BANKRUPT.
How an insured or a lender on bottomry shall claim against the estate of a bankrupt insurer or borrower	731
BANK SAUL.
Vid. Risk (On ship)—Proceedings (Trial) .
BARCELONA.
Ordinance of	- 20
BARRATRY.
Vid. Loss (By Barratry) .
BEANS.
Are comprehended under the word corn	- 223
BELIEF.
Whether matter of belief amounts to a representation,	454
Vid. Representation.
BILL OF HEALTH.
Vid. Documents.
BILL OF LADING.
Vid. Documents,—Interest (Insurable) .
When the indorsee of has an insurable interest	- 103
BILL OF PARCELS.
When proof of interest	- 709
BLOCKADE.
Commerce with a place blockaded	- 80
The effect of a notification of a blockade	80, 81, 835
Of the port of destination, when a loss of the voyage	835, 6
BOTTOMRY

BOTTOMRY AND RESPONDENTIA.	Page.
When an insurable interest, Vid. Interest (Insurable) .
Nature and form of this contract	- 733
Bottomry defined	- ib.
Derivation of the term	- 734
Distinction between bottomry and respondentia	- ib.
The lender has no lien on the homeward cargo	- 735
Its antiquity	- ib.
Whether the nauticum senus of the Romans differed materially from bottomry	- 736
Pecunia trajeſtitia	- ib.
How bottomry differs from a simple loan	- 736
Analogy between bottomry and insurance	- 737
How they differ	- ib.
Utility of this contract	- 738
Not now much in use in England	- ib.
Form of it	- ib.
How the interest must be reserved	- 739
Whether equity would supply the omission	- ib.
Parties to the contract	- 740
Who may lend on bottomry	- ib.
Who may borrow	- ib.
When the captain may hypothecate the ship	- ib.
The owners are liable for money taken up by him,
even in the place where they reside	- ib.
To what extent he may borrow in a foreign country	- 741
Whether the lender be bound to look to the application of the money	- ib.
Whether the loan may be to an alien enemy	- ib.
Thing hypothecated	- 742
On what things money may be lent	- ib.
The borrower may take the money on board with him	- ib.
But the money, or its equivalent, must be exposed to the perils of the sea, at the risk of the lender	- ib.
Wagers in the form of bottomry loans are permitted
in Italy	- 743
Prohibited in France	- ib.
Prohibited in England , on E. I. India voyages	- ib.
Whether a wager in the form of a bottomry loan be a legal contract at common law	- 744
Loans on foreign East India ships prohibited	- 745
Whether

BOTTOMRY AND RESPONDENTIA—continued.

Thing hypothecated.	Page.
Whether money may be lent to a British subject on goods on board an American East India ship	745
In England money may be lent on freight	746
Sailors may borrow on their goods on board, not on their wages	747
Whether money may be lent on a ship or goods already in risk	ib.
Principal and marine interest	748
Of what the loan may consist	ib.
Upon what ground the marine interest is deemed legal	ib.
It can only be due where the risk has commenced	749
Till the risk be commenced, it is a simple loan	ib.
What allowance the lender shall have where the risk has not commenced	750
At what time the marine interest ceases	ib.
Whether it be legal to contract for so many months' interest at all events	751
When common interest begins to run	752
Perils or risks to which the lender is liable	753
The lender must run the sea risk	ib.
The perils are nearly the same as in insurance	ib.
They include capture and piracy	ib.
Nothing short of a total loss will discharge the borrower	754
The lender is not liable for the internal defect of the thing	755
Nor for the act of the owner or Captain	756
Nor for smuggling	ib.
Nor for any loss, if the ship do not fail on the voyage described	757
Or if she deviate without necessity	ib.
Or be changed without necessity	758
But her being pressed into the King's service will excuse a deviation	757
What shall be the duration of the risk	758
Whether the lender be liable to general average	760
By the law of merchants	ib.
By the law of England	761
The lender upon a Danish ship is liable	762
And the Insurers on such loan must make good the loss	762
Whether

BOTTOMRY AND RESPONDENTIA—continued. Page.

Whether the lender be entitled to the benefit of salvage	-	764
Upon East India voyages he is	-	ib.
Whether upon other voyages	-	ib.
How bottomry loans shall be insured	117, 118, 128,	317
The borrower cannot underwrite a policy on the loan		118
If goods be partly insured, and money borrowed on the residue, what shall be the effect of abandonment		608
When the claim of a lender is preferred to that of an insurer	-	609
Vide Abandonment (Effect of).
What remedy the lender shall have against the estate of a bankrupt borrower	-	731

BRITISH SUBJECT.

When he may become the subject of a foreign state for the purposes of commerce	-	183
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------	---	-----

BROKER.

Vide Insurance Broker.

BULLION.

When it may be insured " without further proof of interest than the policy "	-	132, 320, 612
If clandestinely exported a policy on it will be void		320

CABLE.

When the loss or destruction of it shall be a general, when a particular, average	-	540
-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------	---	-----

CAPTAIN.

May insure his goods on board	-	91
When he may insure his prize	-	108
Vide Interest (Insurable).
Whether his ignorance or inattention be a peril of the sea	-	487
Whether his mistake be a risk within the policy	487, 490
His power as agent for all concerned	500, 578, 580, 616
Money paid by him upon a compromise, to obtain restitution of the ship, is a loss within the policy		501, 502
His duty in settling averages	-	544
Vide Loss (By average contributions.)

CAPTAIN—continued. Page.

His power in borrowing money and hypothecating the ship - - 740

Vide Bottomry (Parties to the contract).

His duty in the stowage, care, and delivery of the goods - - 141

For what losses he shall be liable - - ib.

Vide Risk (Owners and master liable).

How he shall be named in the policy - - 312

Vide Policy (Form and requisites).

When he ought to hire another ship - - 171

When a legal disqualification of him shall avoid the policy 177

Vide Ship (Conduct of).

His clothes are not comprehended under the denomination of "goods" - - 319

Vide Policy (Requisites—Subject matter).

CAPTURE.

Loss by—Vide Loss (By capture).

CARRIERS.

Liability of the owners and masters of a ship as carriers - - 243, 4

CERTIFICATE.

Of ministers and churchwardens, &c. upon a loss by fire—Vide Fire (Proof of loss).

CESTUI QUE TRUST.

In what case he has an insurable interest - 114

CHARTER-PARTY.

Vide Documents.

CHANGING RISK.

Vide Risk (Changed).

CHANGING SHIP.

Vide Ship (Changing).

CICERO.

His rule respecting concealment - 479

Vide Concealment.

CIVIL COMMOTION.	Page
The effect of these words in a policy against fire— Vide Fire (Risk). CLOTHES (Captain's).
Insurance of	- 319
Vide Captain.
COIN.
How insured	- 319
If clandestinely exported, a policy on it will be void	- 320
COLLISION.
Vide Loss (By Collision).
COLONIAL TRADE.
Vide Subject Matter (Prohibited colonial trade). COLONY.
Enemy's— Vide Enemy,—Commerce.
British — Vide Subject Matter (Prohibited colonial trade). COMMERCE (maritime).
Growth of in modern Europe	- 8
Causes which contributed to its revival	- ib.
Crusades	- 9
Mariners compass	- ib.
Corporations	- ib.
Of the Lombards	- 10
Of the Hanseatic League	- 11
Of the Flemings and Dutch	- ib.
Of the British	- 12
Checked by monopolies	- 13
As to commerce with the British colonies— Vide Subject matter (Prohibited colonial trade).
As to commerce with the enemy— Vide Loss (By capture),—Enemy. COMMISSION.
Whether expected commissions upon a consignment be an insurable interest	- 138
The commissions and privileges of the captain in the African slave trade is an insurable interest	- 831
Vide Interest (Wager policies). COMPENSATION.
If compensation be made after a loss paid, it shall go to the insurer	- 611
If before, the insured shall not recover	- 777
COMPROMISE.

COMPROMISE.

Vide Loss (By capture).

Page.

CONCEALMENT.

Its nature and effects	464
Avoids the contract	ib.
Though it be innocent	465
The insured is bound to disclose all material circumstances	ib.
When concealment by an agent is fatal	466
When material	467
Whatever respects the state of the ship, time of sailing, &c. is material	ib.
A fact from which the time of sailing may be inferred	469
That the ship is intended for a service of peculiar danger	471
A material concealment is fatal, though the broker thought it immaterial	ib.
Even doubtful rumours respecting the safety of the ship ought to be disclosed	ib.
Non-compliance with an ordinance, though made contrary to the law of nations, is material	472
What things need not be disclosed	473
Cicero's rule	ib.
How understood	ib.
It is unnecessary to disclose what the underwriter knows or ought to know	ib.
Or what lessens the risk	ib.
Or general topics of speculation	ib.
Or matters which are equally open to both parties	474
Or matters for which there is an implied warranty	475
It is sufficient to shew the true state of the ship when the last accounts left her, though a prior less favourable account had been received	477
A letter to shew that the ship might be detained in a foreign port for repairs, need not be communicated	833
It is unnecessary to disclose a circumstance made material by a foreign ordinance	478
Or the probability of an attack	479

CONDEMNATION.

Sentence of—Vide Warranty (Neutral).

- CONSIGNEE. Page.
 When he shall have an insurable interest in the consignment—Vide Interest (Insurable).
- CONSOLATO DEL MARE.
Vide Marine Law.
- CONTAGION.
Vide Infection.
- CONTRABAND OF WAR.
Vide Subject Matter (Contraband of war).
- CONTRIBUTION.
Vide Average.
- CONVOY.
 When a ship may deviate to join convoy - 355
 What shall be a sailing with convoy—Vide Warranty (Convoy).
- CORN.
Vide Risk (Memorandum).
- CORPORATIONS.
 Contributed to the revival of commerce - 9
- COURSE OF EXCHANGE.
Vide Adjustment of Losses (How loss appreciated).
- COURT OF ADMIRALTY:
 For the effect of the sentence of—Vide Warranty (Neutral).
 Ought to proceed on the jus gentium where not altered, as between the parties, by particular treaties 419
 Has jurisdiction in cases of insurance in some countries, not in England - 678
 Its sentence in a proceeding in rem. is conclusive in all courts, and against all persons - 424
 But only so upon the points which it professes to determine - 411
- COURTS OF EQUITY.
 Have no jurisdiction in questions of insurance - 679
- COURTS (foreign).
 Authority of their sentences, Vide Warranty (Neutral),
—Foreign judgment.

COURT OF POLICIES OF INSURANCE. Page.

When and for what reason erected	-	26
Its powers enlarged	-	ib.
Fallen into disuse	-	27

CRUISE.

When cruising in quest of prize is barratry	-	520
When a deviation	-	196
How a liberty to cruise is construed	-	199
Vide Letters of marque ,— Voyage (Deviation from).

CRUSADES.

Contributed to the revival of commerce	-	9
----------------------------------------	---	---

DATE (of the policy).

Vide Policy (Requisites—Date).

DECLARATION.

For the form of a declaration on a policy—Vide Proceedings (Declaration.)

DELAY.

When it shall amount to a deviation—Vide Voyage (Deviation from).

DEMURRAGE.

When a loss within the policy	-	721
-------------------------------	---	-----

DETENTION OF PRINCES.

Vide Loss (By detention).

DEVIATION.

Vide Voyage (Deviation from).

DOCUMENTS.

Neutral ships usually require

Passport, sea-brief, or sea-letter	-	406
Proof of property	-	407
Muster-roll	-	ib.
Charter-party	-	ib.
Bills of lading	-	ib.
Invoices	-	408
Log-book	-	ib.
Bill of health	-	ib.

DOCUMENTS—continued.

Page.

But the want of any of these is only presumptive evidence against the ship's neutrality - - 408

The effect of a ship's subjecting herself to detention for want of any of these - - 419

How the habitation of the Captain shall be set forth in the passport - - 430

Vide Warranty (Neutral).

DOUBLE INSURANCE.

Vide Interest (Double Insurance).

DURATION OF THE RISK.

Vide Risk (Duration of).

EAST INDIA COMPANY.

Vide Voyage (Illegal),—Interest (Wager).

EAST INDIA TRADE.

Vide Voyage (Illegal).

EAST INDIA VOYAGE.

Vide Voyage (Illegal),—Risk (Duration of).

EAST INDIES.

Discovery of passage thither by sea - - 13

Trade of the Americans thither - - 68

EMBARGO.

What, and by what authority laid - - 508

Is a loss within the policy, whether it be legal or not - - ib.

The insurance of a trade in contravention of it is illegal - - 82

The suspension of the power of disposal is a total loss - - 510

It is prima facie a total loss for which the insured may abandon - - 563

Vide Abandonment (Upon capture).

It will not excuse the non-compliance with a warranty - - 351, 352

Vide Warranty (To sail by a given day).

Wages and provisions during an embargo cannot be recovered on a policy on the ship - - 721

Vide Proceedings (Trial).

EMBEZZLEMENT.

When the owners and master shall answer for - - 241

ENEMY.

ENEMY.

Page.

As to the insurance of enemy's property, Vide Parties to the Contract (Insured—Enemy).

A British subject cannot trade with an enemy without a licence - - - 85

And such licence must be strictly observed - - - 87

Goods bought of the enemy cannot be insured 86, 87

But this objection must be taken in the first instance - - - 36, 89

Money cannot be legally lent on bottomry to an alien enemy - - - 741

In what case a neutral in partnership with an alien enemy may insure his interest - - - 44

When the produce of the enemy's country shall be liable to capture in a neutral ship - - - 502

Whether there shall be a return of premium upon an insurance of enemy's property - - - 645

Vide Subject Matter (Commerce with the Enemy)—Return of Premium.

EQUITABLE TITLE.

When an insurable interest - - - 115

EQUITY.

Vide Court of Equity.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

To what purpose the person having the equity of redemption of a ship is considered as owner - 528

EVIDENCE.

When a foreign judgment shall be conclusive in our courts—Vide Warranty (Neutral).

Whether an usage may be proved as explanatory of a clause in a policy - - - 198

When the usage of a similar trade may be proved to shew the practice of a newly established trade - 259

Vide Usage of Trade.

When a declaration of the insured, made abroad before a magistrate, may be read in evidence - 174

In what case a protest is evidence - - - 713

When a subsequent underwriter may give in evidence a representation made to the first - 772

The decision of a foreign court is the best evidence of the law of that country - - - 762

EVIDENCE—continued.	Page.
To prove the amount of salvage upon a recapture, the proceedings of the Court of Admiralty must be proved	- 832
In general one underwriter cannot be a witness for another	- 704
But if the broker be also an underwriter, he may be a witness for the other underwriter	- ib.
A witness who never saw the ship, may prove that, from the description of her by another witness, she was not sea-worthy	- 832
Vide Proceedings (Trial) .

EXPECTATION.

When an insurable interest—Vide Interest (Insurable).

EXPEDIENCE.

Ought not to be the ground of a judicial decision 33, 34

FACT, R.

When he shall have a lien upon a policy of his principal 151

When he may insure in his own name - 308

FIRE, Insurance against.

Nature of this contract	- 784
Defined	- ib.
But little in use in foreign countries	- ib.
Time of its introduction into England	- ib.
Whether more hurtful than beneficial to the public	785
Objections to it answered	- ib.
Companies for this species of insurance	- 786
To what duties subject	- ib.
Interest of the insured	- 787
Whether such insurance be good without interest at common law	- ib.
Made void by statute	- ib.
The insured can only recover to the extent of his interest	- 788
Necessity of preventing such insurances without interest	- ib.
In case of several insurances, each office must have notice	- ib.
What shall amount to a sufficient interest	- 789
Risk	- 790
What risk is usually insured against	- ib.
Exception

FIRE—continued. Page,

Risk.

Exception of fires occasioned by extraordinary causes 790

Meaning of the words "usurped power" - ib.

"civil commotion" - 791

A Company which pays a loss may sue the hundred 794

Duration of the risk for the 15 days after the time insured - 796

Assignment of the policy - 800

To one with interest - ib.

How made upon a death - ib.

By what authority made - 801

Not effected by assignment of the goods insured - 803

Must be by consent of the office - ib.

If the assigner of the goods engage to get the policy transferred, he is answerable if he omit to do so - 807

If the insured gratuitously engage to get the policy transferred, and neglect it, he is liable - 298

Proof of the loss - 808

What are the usual proofs - ib.

Necessity of these proofs - 809

Nothing will excuse the want of them - ib.

The printed proposals requiring them are a part of the contract - 810

The procuring of this certificate is a condition precedent - 811

FIRE (loss by, at sea).

Vide Loss (By fire).

FISHING TACKLE.

Whether included in a policy on a Greenland whaler 727

FLEMINGS.

Commerce of - 13

Ruined by Philip II. - 14

Transferred to England and Holland - ib.

FLORENCE.

Ordinance of - 20

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

By comity conclusive evidence in our Courts - 391

Vide Warranty (Neutral).

This comity not universal - ib.
The

FOREIGN JUDGMENT — continued.	Page.
The French pay no regard to foreign judgments	391
The consequence of the rule not at first foreseen	393
Means, resorted to for evading it	ib.
FOREIGN LAW.
How proved in our courts	762
FOREIGN SHIPS.
Restrictions of 19 Geo. II. c. 37. do not extend to them	129
But the clause against re-insurance does extend to them	144
Vide Interest (Wager,—Re-insurance). FORT.
Whether the Governor of may insure it against capture	91, 497
Vide Interest.
FOUNDERING AT SEA.
Vide Loss (By perils of the sea).
FRANCE.
Vide Foreign Judgment, Warranty (Neutral). FRAUD.
Vide Representation,—Concealment.
Is not to be presumed	466
FREIGHT.
In France freight not already earned cannot be insured	91
In England freight expected, as well as the ship, may be insured	92
The insured can only recover a loss on freight, when the risk has been commenced	ib.
What shall amount to such commencement	ib.
Where ship and freight are separately insured and separately abandoned, to whom freight subsequently earned belongs	604, 606, 607
It can only be insured by one who has a legal or equitable title to the ship	115
Money may be lent on bottomry or freight	746
Vide Interest (Insurable).
The insurer on goods is in no case liable for freight	6*
How	728, 729

FREIGHT — continued.	Page.
How a part owner may insure freight	- 730
What shall be the duration of the risk on freight	278
What shall be the effect of an abandonment on freight.
Vide Abandonment (Effect of).
FRUIT.
When the insurer shall be liable for a damage to fruit	232
FURNITURE OF THE SHIP.
Vide Tackle.
GAMING.
Nature and effects of this vice	- 119
Vide Interest (Wager policies).
GENERAL AVERAGE.
Vide Average.
GOODS.
What may be insured under this denomination	- 319
Lashed to the deck, how insured	- ib.
Whether fishing tackle be goods	- 727
GOVERNOR.
Vide Fort,—Interest.
HANSEATIC LEAGUE.
Vide Commerce,—Marine Law.
HEALTH.
Warranty of	- 769
HOPE.
When an insurable interest—Vid. Interest (Insurable).
HUSBAND, (ship's).
Vid. Agent.
HYPOTHECATION.
Vid. Bottimry.
JETTISON OR JETSON.
Vid. Average.
JEWELS.
How insured	- 320
If clandestinely exported, the policy will be void	- ib.
JOINT INSURANCE.
Vid. Insurance Companies.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS.	Page.
Authority of	24
JUS POSTLIMINII.
With respect to captured ships, continues for ever	573
INDIA COMPANT.
Vid. East India Company.
INDEMNITY.
What shall be deemed	617
INFANT.
Vid. Lives, (Insurance upon—Interest).
INFECTION.
Whether the insurer be liable to make good a loss occasioned by burning a ship to prevent infection	494
INQUIRY, (Writ of).
What evidence sufficient upon	129
Vid. Proceedings.
INSURANCE.
Defined	1
Abuses of, restrained	2
Marine	ib.
Utility of	3
Origin of	3
Cleirac's account of	4
Whether known to the ancients	5
First practised in Italy	10
When introduced into England	11, 18
Not mentioned in the ancient sea laws	17
Law of, a branch of marine law	18
Materials from which this law is collected	18 to 24
Regulated by few positive laws in England	21
Treatises on	23
Judicial decisions	24
When actions at common law were first brought on policies	ib.
Ancient mode of settling disputes upon	25
Vid. Court of policies of insurance.
Questions on should not depend on subtleties	577
Ought not to be lucrative to the insured	617
INSURANCE BROKER.
Nature of his dealings	291
Account

INSURANCE BROKER—continued.	Page.
Account between him and each underwriter	- 291
His liability for premiums extends only to legal insurances	- 292
Though the premium be due from him, the loss is due to the insured	- 293
He has a lien on the policy for his general balance	292, 301
Unless his employer acts as agent	- 301
If the underwriters give credit to him only for the premiums, he may recover them from the insured	- 294
If he employ another broker, he is answerable for not furnishing him with all his instructions	- 299
To what extent he is thus answerable	- ib.
He ought not to be an underwriter	- 301, 704
If he should, he may nevertheless be a witness for the other underwriters	- ib.
If he pretend that he has effected a policy, trover will lie against him for it	- 302
How the plaintiff shall recover in such action	- 303
He may insure in his own name without describing himself as agent	- 311
His duty as to representations	- 451
He is responsible for any representation he makes without authority	- 452

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Vid. Parties to the contract (Insurance Companies).
Establishment of the Royal Exchange and London Assurance companies	- 45
Their charters	- 46
They have an exclusive right to insure ships and goods upon a joint capital	- ib.
How other companies are restrained from insuring as such	- 46, 47
But the right of individual insurers remains unaltered	- 47
And the privileges of the East India and South Sea companies are reserved	- ib.
How the Royal Exchange and London Assurance companies may be dissolved	- ib.
Whether the continuance of their monopoly be not injurious to the public	- 48
One partner cannot recover from another his proportion of losses incurred upon joint insurances	- ib.
Nor

INSURANCE COMPANIES— continued.		Page.
Nor can he recover, even from the broker, the share of a loss received by him from the other partner	-	49
Nor can the ostensible underwriter recover the profits from the broker, on the ground that the partnership being illegal, he was sole insurer	-	49
But the contract is binding as between the ostensible underwriter and the innocent insured	-	51
An award that a balance is due from one partner to another upon joint insurances is void	-	ib.
In what case an insurance upon a joint capital may be good	-	52
How the common memorandum in their policies differs from that of private underwriters	-	224
Vid. Rift (Excluded by the memorandum).
May make agreements for insurances upon unstamped labels	-	339
In what form of action they must be sued	-	693
Vid. Proceedings (Declaration).
How they may plead	-	608
Vid. Proceedings (Plea).

INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

Vid. Fire.

INSURANCE UPON LIVES.

Vid. Lives.

INSURED.

What persons may be	-	31
Whether an alien enemy	-	ib.
Vid. Enemy parties to the contract (Enemy).
How he, his agent, or trustee shall be named in the policy	-	306

INSURERS.

What persons may be	-	44
Individual underwriters	-	ib.
Character of the French underwriters	-	45
English	-	ib.
A borrower upon bottomry cannot be an insurer upon the loan	-	118
What they are presumed to know	-	270
Vid. Concealment.

INTEREST.

INTEREST.	Page.
What shall amount to an insurable interest -	104
Qualified property -	105
In what case different persons may each have an insurable interest in the same thing to its full amount	ib.
When the indorsee of a bill of lading has an insurable interest - - -	ib.
When the indorser still retains an insurable interest	ib.
Where an expectation of profit, or of a future interest in a thing, is an insurable interest -	107
In what case a captor has an insurable interest -	108
Trustees for the care and disposal of ships and goods, under the direction of third persons have an insurable interest - - -	109
Whether a trustee, a consignee, or a prize agent, has an insurable interest - - -	111
A lien on the thing insured is an insurable interest	311
Whether an insurance without interest be a legal contract at common law - - -	112
Where a mere cestuique trust may insure -	114
Where a general agent may insure in his own right	115
An insurable interest can only be founded on a legal or equitable title - - -	ib.
A joint purchaser of a ship, whose name is not in the register, has neither title - - -	ib.
What title to freight will make an insurable interest	116
The lender on bottomry has an insurable interest in the sum lent - - -	117
And the borrower in the surplus value of the thing hypothecated - - -	118
But the usage of a particular trade may vary this rule - - -	ib.
The borrower cannot be an insurer on the sum lent	ib.
When there shall be a return of premium for want of interest in the insured, Vid. Return of premium.
How the interest of the insured shall be proved— · Vid. Proceedings (Trial).
Wager policies.
Mischiefs resulting from a spirit of gaming -	119
Legality of wagers considered -	119
Difference between a wager and an insurance -	121
Form of a wager policy - - -	ib.
The INTEREST—continued.

Page.

Wager policies.

The words "interest or no interest" do not necessarily make a wager	-	-	-	121
Prohibited in most countries	-	-	-	121
Whether legal at common law in England	-	-	-	122
At what time introduced here	-	-	-	ib.
Series of authorities on which its legality rests	123;	126
How restrained by statute	-	-	-	127
Exceptions as to privateers	-	-	-	ib.
Also as to goods imported from the Spanish and Portuguese colonies	-	-	-	128
And as to foreign ships and goods	-	-	-	129
The insured may be compelled to declare how much he has insured, and borrowed on bottomry				ib.
An insurance on one thing, to depend on the fate of another, is a wager	-	-	-	130
What the insured in a wager policy takes upon himself to perform	-	-	-	132
What shall be deemed a good policy in the Lisbon trade	-	-	-	ib.
A small interest will not take the case out of the statute	-	-	-	133
An agreement in consideration of a premium, to pay a certain sum, if a ship do not arrive safe, is a wager	-	-	-	134
How a valued policy is distinguishable from a wager				ib.
Recovering beyond the true interest is against the statute	-	-	-	138
A valued policy upon expected profit has been holden not to be a wager	-	-	-	ib.
So upon expected commission	-	-	-	ib.
Whether there may be a wager in the form of a bottomry loan—Vld. Bottomry .

Re-insurance	-	-	-	143
What	-	-	-	143, 145
To whom the re-insurer is responsible	-	-	-	143
In what cases legal	-	-	-	ib.
The law restraining it extends to foreign ships	-	-	-	144
Different sorts of re-insurance	-	-	-	144
Insurance of the solvency of an insurer	-	-	-	145

Double

INTEREST—continued. Page.

Double insurance	- 146
How it differs from re-insurance	- ib.
Though a wager, it is not void	- ib.
But the insured can only recover one satisfaction on the several policies	- ib.
Those who pay on one, may recover contribution from the underwriters on the others	- 147, 148
Whether different persons may insure the same thing, and each recover the full value	- 149
Distinction between two insurances on different interests, and a double insurance	- 152
Whether a second insurer, with notice of the former insurance, be liable for the whole loss	- 151
The insured, if required, must declare how much he has insured in the whole	- 152

“ INTEREST OR NO INTEREST.”

Vide Interest (Wager)—Loss (By capture).

INTEREST (Proof of).

Vide Proceedings (Trial).

INVOICE.

Vide Documents.

JUS POSTLIMINII.

In case of capture and recapture - 500, 501, 551

LANDING OF GOODS.

Vide Shipping and landing of Goods.

LAW OF MERCHANTS.

A branch of public law - 13

LAW OF NATIONS.

Defined	- 439*
No individual state can vary it by its own ordinances	416
It is the rule for deciding questions of Prize	- ib.
Alterations by treaty affect only the parties to such treaty	- ib.

LEE (Lord C. J.).

Character of his decisions - 29

LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Taken by a ship, insured as a private trader, will discharge the insurers - 283

LETTERS OF MARQUE—continued.	Page.
Otherwise, if taken merely to entice seamen to enter, and without any design to use them -	285
Vide Risk (Changing).
In what case a ship, having letters of marque, may cruise in quest of prize -	195
A liberty to cruise for 6 weeks means 6 successive weeks -	197
The power given to ships having letters of marque must be strictly pursued -	196
If it be to " chase, capture, and man prizes, " it will not enable her to convoy a prize -	199
Vide Deviation.
"LIBERTY TO CRUISE."
Vide Letters of Marque—Risk (Duration of)—Voyage (Deviation from). "LIBERTY TO TOUCH, STAY, AND TRADE."
How construed -	188, 191
A ship, having liberty to touch , may trade , without express permission, if it occasion no delay, deviation, or additional risk -	835
Vide Voyage (Deviation from).
How, in the case of an East India voyage	272, 273
Vide Risk (Duration of). LIEN.
When it is an insurable interest -	311
Vide Factor.
LIGHTERS.
When the loss of goods put into lighter, shall be a ge- neral average -	533
Vide Loss (By average).
When the risk continues in lighters -	254
Vide Risk (Duration of—On goods).
LIVES (Insurance upon).	766
Nature of this contract -	ib.
Defined -	ib.
Companies for -	767
Warranty of health and age of life -	769
Declaration of -	ib.
How

LIVES (Insurance upon)—continued. Page.Warranty of health and age of life.*

How made - - - 769

A particular infirmity will not falsify it - - ib.

Without it, the insurer takes all risks - - 772

Vide Evidence.Interest of the insured - - - 774

Without such interest the contract is void - ib.

In what case a creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor - - - 775Whether this ought not to be where the payment depends on the life - - - 776If the debt be paid, even after the death, nothing can be recovered on the policy - - - 777

It must be a legal debt - - - 778

The insurer cannot object the infancy of the debtor - ib.

A trustee may insure for his cestui que trust - 778*Risk which the insurer runs* - - - 780

The loss must always be total - - - ib.

What are the usual exceptions where the party insures his own life - - - ib.To subject the insurers, not only the cause of the death, but the death itself, must happen within the time limited - - - 780, 782If the policy be from the day of the date, that day is excluded - - - 781Why there are so few litigated questions on this contract - - - 666, 783Remedy of the insured against the estate of a bankrupt insurer - - - 783

When there shall be a return of premium - 666

*Vide Return of Premium (Risk not commenced).LOG BOOK.Vide Documents.LOMBARDS (Commerce of). - - - 10

Petition against - - - 12

Restrained - - - 13

LONDON ASSURANCE.*Vide Insurance Companies.LOSS.

Total - - - 486

c c 2

Partial

LOSS— continued .	Page:
Partial - - - - -	487
to ship - - - - -	ib.
to goods - - - - -	ib.
As to what shall be a total or a partial loss, Vide
Abandonment .
Average - - - - -	ib.
Every loss must be the immediate consequence of some of the perils insured against - - - - -	717, 719, 720
What losses are not within our policies - - - - -	218, 220
If a loss be within the general words, the insurer will be liable, unless he shew that it arose from a peril not meant to be insured against - - - - -	270
If the port of destination be shut, or in the enemy's hands, and the voyage lost, it is not a loss within
the policy - - - - -	220
When there shall be a total loss, though the goods
specifically remain - - - - -	227, 238
What shall be a loss within the policy, Vide Proceedings
(Declaration) .
Within what time a loss must happen to make the underwriters liable, Vide Risk (Duration of) .
A loss improperly paid may be recovered back - - - - -	732
How a loss shall be averred in the declaration— Vide
Proceedings (Declaration) .
How proved, Vide Proceedings (Trial) .
By perils of the sea - - - - -	487
How these words are usually understood - - - - -	416, 487
They comprehend every species of sea damage - - - - -	487
Foundering, stranding, striking on sunken rocks - - - - -	ib.
What damage to the ship's tackle is a loss within
the policy - - - - -	420
Loss from mut by perils of the sea - - - - -	ib.
Loss from ignorance, &c. of the master, &c. is not - - - - -	ib.
Foundering - - - - -	483
When a missing ship shall be presumed to have foundered - - - - -	488
If the damage can be repaired, it is only a partial loss - - - - -	ib.
When a ship shall be deemed a missing ship - - - - -	ib.
What shall be a loss by capture, and not by
perils of the sea - - - - -	490

LOSS--continued.

Page.

By perils of the sea.

If part of a ship's crew be impressed at a critical moment, and in consequence the ship drive on shore, this is a loss by the perils of the sea - 490

If slaves be thrown overboard on account of a scarcity of water, occasioned by an unusual length of the voyage, this is not a loss by the perils of the sea 491

So, if they die from want of food, arising from the same cause - - - - - ib.

If a ship be destroyed by worms, it is not a loss by the perils of the sea - - - - - 492

Nor if she be damaged by the ordinary service in which she is engaged - - - - - ib.

By collision - - - - - 493

Is a loss within the policy - - - - - ib.

The party suffering by collision, or the insurers in his name, have a remedy against the master or owners of the vessel in fault - - - - - 493

By fire - - - - - 499

If this be by accident, it is within the policy - 494

Whether, if imputable to the master or mariners, it be within the policy - - - - - ib.

Whether if it be by order of the State, to prevent infection, it be within the policy - - - - - ib.

By capture - - - - - 495

What shall be deemed a capture - - - - - 495, 719

Whether an action will lie for a loss by British capture - - - - - 40, 41, 830.

Vide Parties to the contract.

A seizure by an enemy for smuggling, is not a capture jure belli - - - - - 689

Whether lawful or unlawful, the insurer is liable - 495

And whether the property be thereby changed - ib.

The effect of capture where the policy is "interest or no interest" - - - - - 496-7-8-9

The effect of capture and recapture in divesting and re-vesting the property - - - - - 499

The insurers are liable for all fair charges occasioned by capture and recapture - - - - - 501

LOSS—continued.

Page.

By capture.

As money paid to the captors upon a compromise	-	502
In what case the produce of an enemy's country shall be liable to capture	- - -	ib.
Whether captured ships may be ransomed	-	503
When a recaptured ship may prosecute her voyage	-	505
Within what time the recaptors shall proceed to judgment in such case	- - -	ib.
Capture does not necessarily make a total loss, nor recapture prevent it	- - -	565, 579
If the captain purchase from the captors, the sum paid is a partial loss	- - -	580, 581

Vide Abandonment (Upon capture)—Enemy—Loss (By salvage.)

By detention of princes	- - -	506
Arrest of princes, what	- - -	ib.
Distinction between arrest and capture	- - -	ib.
If government seize a corn ship in a famine, this is an arrest	- - -	507
But if done by a mob of rioters it is a capture by pirates	- - -	508
The word people in the policy means a people, not a mob	- - -	ib.
If a neutral be taken at sea, under pretence that she is an enemy, this is a capture	- - -	507
But if seized for a breach of the law of nations, it is an arrest	- - -	ib.
Not so, if she be seized for navigating contrary to law	-	508
An embargo is always an arrest within the policy	-	ib.
An arrest by the authority of the British government is a loss within the policy	- - -	509, 830
A suspension of the power of disposal is a total loss	-	510
If a ship insured " at and from " a port be arrested in the port, it is a loss within the policy	-	ib.
If a ship be seized after a cessation of hostilities, it is an arrest	- - -	514
If a neutral ship bound to an enemy's port, be seized for having enemy's goods on board, and while under detention, her port of destination be blockaded, and the voyage lost, this is a loss upon her neutral cargo	- - -	836

By

LOSS—continued.	Page.
By barratry	- 515
Barratry defined	- ib.
In what case insurance against barratry ought to be permitted	- ib.
What shall amount to barratry	516-17-18
Even dropping anchor with a fraudulent view is barratry	- 532
Whether the captain may be insured against the barratry, of the sailors	- 518
When a deviation shall not be barratry	- ib.
Whether the sailors may commit barratry against the will of the captain	- 520
When their disobedience amounts to barratry	- ib.
When cruising in quest of prize is barratry	- ib.
What act of the captain amounts to barratry	- 522
It can only be committed against the owners	- 524
It cannot be committed by the captain, if he be owner	- 528
Or even if he have the equity of redemption	- ib.
A general freighter is owner for the voyage	- ib.
A deviation without his knowledge, though with the consent of the owner, is barratry	- ib.
In proving barratry, it is not necessary to prove negatively, that the master was not owner, or that it was not done with the owner's consent	- 531
The words " in any lawful trade " will not exempt the insurers from barratry by smuggling	- 532
It is immaterial whether the loss happen during the act of barratry, or after	- 533
But the insurers will not be liable if the loss, occasioned by barratry, do not happen during the voyage	- ib.
How a loss by barratry shall be averred in the declaration, Vide Proceedings (Declaration) .
How it shall be proved, Vide Proceedings (Proof of loss) .
By average contributions.
Average defined	- 535
Different sorts	- ib.
General	536, 542
Particular	- 536
Petty	- ib.
c c 4	General

LOSS—continued.

Page.

By average contributions.

General average is a charge against the insurer, when the ship or goods insured are saved by it	-	537
When average contributions may be claimed	-	535, 537
When petty average shall be a charge on the insurer	-	536
When the loss of goods put into lighters to lighten the ship shall be a general average	-	ib.
When wages incurred during a repair shall be a general average	-	538, 721, 726
In the case of unlawful detention where the ship puts into port to repair	-	538, 539, 541
Damage by wear and tear or stress of weather, is not a general average	-	540
Whether an injury sustained in an endeavour to escape an enemy be a general average	-	543
How goods shall be valued in settling an average	-	621
What shall be only a particular average	-	542
What shall be liable to contribute to a general average	-	543
Captain's duty in settling a general average	-	544
Remedy against him for neglecting this	-	ib.
How the contribution shall be adjusted	-	545
In what degree the ship and freight are liable	-	ib.
How a jettison shall be valued	-	ib.
How the underwriters shall reimburse average contributions	-	546
Whether the lender on bottomry be liable to general average, Vide Bottomry.
What shall be an average loss within the common memorandum, Vide Risks (Memorandum).

By salvage	-	547
Salvage defined	-	ib.
The lien for it at common law	-	ib.
How regulated	-	548
How secured	-	ib.
How adjusted when the parties disagree	-	ib.
How the effects saved shall be disposed of	-	549
Reward of persons not employed	-	ib.
Who may employ persons in the salvage of ships, &c.	-	550
By whom the quantum of salvage shall be adjusted	-	ib.
How it shall be levied on the effects saved	-	ib.
How

LOSS—continued.

Page.

By salvage.

How regulated upon a recapture by the marine law	551
How by statute	ib.
Where recaptured by men of war	ib.
by privateers	ib.
by both jointly	552
If a captured ship be set forth as a ship of war , she shall be prize	ib.
The insured need not declare specially for salvage	552, 720
What shall be sufficient evidence of loss by salvage upon a recapture	832
Vide Proceedings (Proof of loss.)
How salvage is regulated in the case of recaptured neutrals	552
How in the case of recaptured allies	553
How the insured must shew his title to recover for salvage	ib.
If the salvage be very high the insured may abandon	ib.
Whether a lender on bottomry be entitled to the benefit of salvage, Vide Bottomry.

By the death of slaves - - - 554

Slaves formerly insured as goods	93
How this trade was regulated	ib.
Now totally abolished in the British empire	ib.
Whether natural death be a legal risk	ib.
Whether slaves thrown overboard in a scarcity of water, or who perish for want of food, be a loss within the policy	ib.
What shall be a mortality by mutiny	555

By the death of animals - - - ib.

This, if occasioned by any of the perils insured against, is a loss within the policy	ib.
Not so, if they die of disease	ib.

Fraudulent losses - - - 556

Punishment of piracy	ib.
Punishment of the wilful destruction of ships to the prejudice of the owners	557
Punishment of wilfully casting away any ship to the prejudice of the underwriters or owners of the goods	550

“ LOST

" LOST OR NOT LOST."	Page.
These words are not peculiar to English policies	- 332
Reasons for inserting them	- ib.
Do not make the contract a wager	- 333
Nor more hazardous	- ib.
LOUIS XIV.
Account of his famous ordinance of the marine	- 18
MAGENS
His project for a system of marine law	- 21
MANSFIELD, (Lord).
Celebrity of his judgements in insurance causes	- 29
MARINE INTEREST.
Vide Bottomry .
MARINE LAW.
History of	- 14
Rhodian law	- 15
Amalphytan code	- ib.
Consolato del mare	- 16
Laws of Oleron	- ib.
Laws of Wisbuy	- 17
Ordinances of the Hanseatic League	- 18
Ordinance of the marine of Louis XIV.	- ib.
Law of insurance	- ib.
Law of merchants	- 19
Particular usages of trade	- ib.
MARINERS.
Vide Sailors .
MARINERS COMPASS.
Discovery of	- 9
MARKET.
The insurer ought not to be involved in the rise or fall of	- 628
Vide Adjustment .
MASTER (of a ship)
Vide Captain .
MEMORANDUM (usual)
What risks are excluded by, Vide Risks (Memorandum) .

MERCHANTS (law of)	Page.
A branch of public law	- 18

MISREPRESENTATION.

Vide Representation.

MISSING SHIP.

When presumed to be lost	- 488
Vide Loss (By perils of the sea).

MISTAKE (of the captain).

Whether a risk within the policy	- 487
----------------------------------	-------

MONEY.

How insured	319
Cannot be legally insured, if clandestinely transported	320
When it shall contribute to a general average	- 543

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

When a count upon, is necessary in the declaration,

Vide Proceedings (Declaration).

Will lie to recover back a loss improperly paid	- 732
Or to recover back the premium	- 694

MONOPOLIES.

Effect of	- 13
Abolished	- ib.

MOORED (in facty.)

When a ship shall be said to be	- 262
Vide Risk (Duration of—On ship).

MORTGAGE (of a ship.)

In what case the mortgagor shall be deemed owner	528
When a mortgage shall be sufficient proof of interest	711

MUSTER ROLL.

Vide Documents

MUTINY.

When an excuse for deviation	- 212
Of slaves, what shall be a loss by	- 555
Vide Abandonment—Voyage (Deviation from).

NAUTICUM FOENUS.

Vide Bottomry.

NAVIGATION LAWS (British)	Page.
Summary of	- 62
Extended to Scotland and Ireland	- 63
Vide Subject matter (Prohibited colonial trade) .

NECESSITY (voyage of)
Vide Voyage (Deviation from) .

NEGRO SLAVES.
Vide Slaves, —Risk, —Loss (By death of slaves) .

NEUTRAL.
In what case a neutral, though partner with an alien enemy, may insure	-	-	- 44
Neutral property may be insured against British capture, provided the insurance contravene no policy of the state	-	-	- 830
Vide Enemy,—Parties to the contract.
Obligations of neutrality	-	-	- 78
The right of visitation and search of neutrals vindicated	-	-	- 81, 83
Who shall be deemed neutral	-	-	- 316
In what cases the produce of the enemy's country may be captured in a neutral vessel	-	-	- 502
If a neutral be brought into port, having enemy's property on board, and while detained there, her port of destination be blockaded, this is a loss of the voyage, for which the underwriters on neutral goods are liable	-	-	- 835
Warranty of neutrality	-	-	- 384
Vide Warranty (Neutral).

NEW TRIAL.
Is not granted to let in the objection of alien enemy	36, 84, 85, 89
Is granted with more facility in questions of insurance than in other cases	- - - 702

NORTHERN CONFEDERACY.
Account of its institution	442

OLERON (Laws of.)
Vide Marine Law .

OPEN POLICY.
Vide Policy .

OPINION.

Page.

Vide Evidence.

ORDINANCES.

Vide Marine Law,—Insurance.

OVER INSURANCE.

Vide Interest (Double insurance)—Return of premium.

OWNERS.

To what risks liable, Vide Risk (Owners liable).

PAPERS (ships').

Vide Documents.

PAROL AGREEMENT.

When it will control the written policy - - 345

PARTIAL LOSS.

Vide Loss,—Abandonment.

PARTIES TO THE CONTRACT.

What persons may be insured	31
Whether an alien enemy	- ib.
Occasionally prohibited by statute	- ib.
Whether at common law such insurance be valid	32
Opinions of foreign writers	- ib.
Reasons of policy against it	- 33, 37
Lord Mansfield's sentiments	- 34
Whether the law ought to yield to expedience	34, 35
Whether an action will lie for a loss by British capture	- 40, 41
A neutral may recover for a loss by British capture, provided the insurance contravene no policy of the state	- 830
An enemy cannot recover on a policy on goods, though shipped before the war, and the action brought after the peace	- 40
And though the goods were of British manufacture	- 38, 39
Nor can an agent, though a creditor, maintain an action for him	- 38
Whether an action would, in such case, lie for any other loss	- 40
2	The

PARTIES TO THE CONTRACT—continued. Page.What persons may be insured.

The same rule holds in the case of capture from a co-belligerent - - - - - 43

Whether British property may be insured against British capture. - - - - - ib.

Whether a neutral residing in the enemy's country may be insured - - - - - 44

Vide Enemy.

What persons may be insurers - - - - - 44

Underwriters - - - - - ib.

Character of the French underwriters - - - 45

English underwriters - - - - - ib.

Vide Underwriters.

The two insurance companies - - - - - ib.

Vide Insurance Companies.

PARTNERS (insurance by.)

Vide Insurance Companies.

PASSPORT.

Vide Documents.

PEAS.

Are comprehended under the word corn - - - 223

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA.

Vide Bottomry.

PEOPLE.

Meaning of this word in the policy - 230, 508, 689

Vide Risk,—Loss (By arrest of princes).

PERILS.

Vide Risks,—Loss

PETTY AVERAGE.

Vide Average.

PIRACY.

How punished - - - - - 556

POLICY.

Nature and different sorts of - - - - - 286

Valued - - - - - ib.

Open - - - - - ib.

How the value ought to be regulated - 288

Effect of the valuation - - - - - ib.

How

POLICY—continued.

Page.

Nature and different sorts of.

How a valued policy differs from a wager 135, 289

How the value is regulated by the French laws 290How by the Eng'ish law - - - 134, 291Effect of the valuation before and after wager policies were held legal - - - 135, 136Whether the insured upon a valued policy ought to recover more than the true value - - - 138A valued policy on commission or profit is good *ib.*Upon a valued policy, the underwriters shall be liable as for a total loss, though previous to the loss, part of the goods valued be disposed of 139Yet the value is only prima facie evidence of the interest - - - - - 289The principal difference between an open and a valued policy, is in the case of a total loss 291*How and by whom effected* - - - *ib.*Usually by an insurance broker - - - *ib.Vide Insurance Broker.*When effected the insured may maintain trover for it - - - - - 301If an agent pretend he has effected it, trover will lie for it - - - - - 302*Vide Agent.Form and requisites of* - - - 303When the present form was introduced - ib.

How interpreted - - - 250, 304, 5

A witness may give evidence of an usage explanatory of a clause, but not his opinion of its meaning 198

Occasional clauses - - - 5

Its requisites are,

1. The name of the insured - - - *ib.*In whose name it may be - - - *ib.*Policies in blank prohibited - - - ib.

Who shall be an agent to insure - 308

A general agent may insure without order 310

When the name of the broker is sufficient 311

An agent, though not general, may insure 312

2. The names of the ship and master - - - ib.

When the ship specified may be changed,

Vide Ship (Changing).

No

POLICY—continued.

Page.

Requisites.The names of the ship and master.

No goods are within the policy, but those on board the ship named - 313

But a mistake in the name will not vitiate, if the identity be proved - ib.

When an insurance may be on board "ship or ships" - 314

Vide Ship.

The species of vessel must be mentioned - ib.

If the vessel be a letter of marque or privateer, she must be so described - 315

The master's name must be mentioned - ib.

When he may be changed - ib.

3. The subject matter - ib.

It may be on goods generally, or the goods may be specified - 316

What shall be comprehended under a general policy on goods - 319

What not - 320

What is comprehended in the word ship - ib.

Bottomry loans must be described as such - 317

Unless the usage of a particular trade should make an exception - 319

4. The description of the voyage - 321

Has a direct reference to all the circumstances attending it - 270

If a blank be left for the port of departure, or of destination, the policy will be void - 321

How the commencement and end of the risk shall be specified - ib

If for a term, it must not exceed 12 months - 322

It must not be calculated to induce a false conclusion - ib.

A policy on goods from the loading at A. will not protect goods loaded at B. though they come to A before the ship sails on her voyage - 323

A policy from several places of departure will not cover a voyage from one to another of them - ib.

The port or ports of destination must be truly stated - ib.

If

POLICY—continued.

Page.

Requisites.Description of the voyage.

If the ship sail on a different voyage from that mentioned, the underwriters will be discharged - - - 324, 326

Distinction between an intended deviation and a different voyage - - - 327

Vide Voyage (Deviation from.)

If the ship be to take a particular course, it must be specified - - - ib.

5. The perils insured against - - - 332

What perils are not within the general words - ib.

Of the clause "lost or not lost" - - - ib.

This does not make the policy a wager 333

Nor the contract more hazardous - - - ib.

6. The powers of the insured in case of misfortune 334

Meaning of this clause - - - 591

7. Promise of the insurers and receipt for the premium 334

Why the receipt is part of the policy - ib.

An action will lie for the premium notwithstanding the receipt - - - 335

The non-payment will not affect the contract - ib.

8. The common memorandum - - - 336

9. The date and subscription - - - ib.

How the subscriptions are made - - - 337

10. The stamp - - - ib.

To what duties marine insurances are liable 337, 340

In certain cases the excess of duty, upon an over-insurance, is allowed - - - 338

What contract shall be deemed a policy liable to these duties - - - ib.

No policy on a ship to be for a term exceeding 12 months - - - ib.

When a policy may be altered without a new stamp - - - 339

No policy to be stamped after written or printed - - - ib.

Penalties for effecting, or contracting for, any insurance, unless stamped - - - ib.

Penalties on the broker for negotiating such insurance - - - ib.

POLICY.—continued.

Page.

Requisites.

In what case the two insurance companies may contract on unstamped labels - - 339

A slip of paper to prove who was the first underwriter, to whom a representation was made, must be stamped - - 341, 455

But this objection should be made in the first instance - - - 455

A memorandum extending the time of sailing requires no new stamp - - - ib.

But a policy on a "ship and outfit," cannot be altered to "ship and goods," without a new stamp - - - 342

But a policy will cover successive cargoes without a new stamp - - - ib.

When a policy may be altered or corrected 343

What will authorize an alteration - - - ib.

In what case the court will order it - - - ib.

In what case it may be done after a loss - - - ib.

When a court of equity will direct an alteration 344

When it may be in pursuance of an agreement ib.

When a parol agreement shall control the words 345

POLICY BROKER.

Vide Insurance Broker.

PORT OF DISCHARGE.

Where there are several, in what order to be taken 325

Vide Voyage (Deviation from.)

PREMIUM.

Why the receipt for it is part of the policy - 334

An action will lie for it notwithstanding this receipt 335

The non-payment of it does not affect the contract ib.

Vide Policy (Premium)—Return of Premium,—Insurance Broker.

PRESUMPTION.

Upon what ground a legitimate presumption may be founded - - - 426, 427

When a ship shall be presumed to be lost - - - 488

PRIVATEER.

May be insured, "interest or no interest" - - 127

To what salvage entitled upon a recapture - 552

PRIZE.

PRIZE.

Page.

When insurable by the captors, Vide Interest (Insurable)
—Warranty (Neutral.)

PRIZE AGENT.

When he shall have an insurable interest, Vide Interest (Insurable.)

PROCEEDINGS.

When actions at common law were first brought on policies - - - - - 24
 Ancient mode of settling disputes - - - - - 25
 History of the court of policies of insurance - - - - - ib.

In what courts actions on policies may be brought - - - - - 678
 Courts of common law - - - - - ib.
 Courts of equity have no jurisdiction - - - - - 679

The Declaration - - - - - 680

What is the proper form of action - - - - - ib.

Against private underwriters - - - - - ib.

Against the two insurance companies - - - - - 693

Form of declaring against them - - - - - ib.

Heads of a declaration - - - - - 680

Count for money had and received - - - - - 681, 694

No occasion to declare specially upon an adjustment.

Vide Adjustment.

How the interest shall be averred - - - - - 687, 792

How in the case of a foreign ship - - - - - 694

One of several insureds may aver interest in himself alone - - - - - 712

When the venue may be changed - - - - - 694

Plea, and bringing money into court. - - - - - ib.

When the general issue is the proper plea - - - - - ib.

Instance of a special traverse - - - - - 695 n.

What may be given in evidence under the general issue - - - - - ib.

In what case the insured must declare how much he has insured - - - - - 696

When the defendant may plead a tender - - - - - ib.

When bring money into court - - - - - ib.

On what count - - - - - ib.

PROCEEDINGS—continued.

Page.

Plca and bringing money into court.

Whether alien enemy ought to be specially pleaded 697

How the two insurance companies must plead 699

Consolidation Rule. - - - - - ib.

Necessity of consolidating actions - - - - - ib.

Formerly done by authority of courts of equity - ib.

First attempt to consolidate in a court of law - ib.

Nature of the rule - - - - - 701

Necessity of mutual admissions - - - - - ib.

Terms imposed on each party - - - - - ib.

Benefits resulting from the rule - - - - - ib.

Effect of consolidating - - - - - 702

When the suing out of a writ of error is a breach of the rule - - - - - ib.Trial - - - - - 703

Proofs on the part of the plaintiff - - - - - ib.

An unde. writer cannot be a witness - 704

Unless he be the broker who effected the policy ib.

The captain who is a part owner may prove that the place in the policy was the true destination 705

But not that a deviation was justified by necessity ib.

*The proofs on the part of the plaintiff are,*1. The contract - - - - - 706No parol evidence can be received to prove an agreement inconsistent with the policy - ib.Whether an usage explanatory of a clause may be proved - - - - - 707

How far the usage of trade ought to prevail ib.

What shall be sufficient proof of the authority of an agent to underwrite for his principal ib.2. Payment of the premium - - - - - 7083. Interest of the insured - - - - - 709

How this shall be proved - - - - - ib.

Upon a valued policy - - - - - 710

Upon a policy on goods - - - - - ib. 711

Bottomry loans - - - - - ib.

How a bottomry bond shall be proved - ib.

Proof of possession is prima facie evidence of title to a ship - - - - - 711

So the appointment of captain - - - - - 712

But the register is conclusive - - - - - ib.

PROCEEDINGS—continued.

Page.

Trial.Proofs on the part of the plaintiff.Interest of the insured.

- One of several insured's may aver and prove interest in himself alone - - 712
- What shall be proof of title to a prize ship - ib.
- Whether upon a writ of enquiry the plaintiff must prove it - - 129
4. Compliance with warranties - - 713
- What shall be sufficient proof of neutral property - - 714
5. The loss - - - - - ib.
- This must be shewn to have happened during the risk insured - - - - - ib.
- One part owner may prove his loss upon a general policy on freight - - 730
- Upon a ship - - - - - 715
- Upon goods - - - - - ib.
- By capture - - - - - 716, 717
- By detention of princes - - - - 716
- By barratry - - - - - 717
- What loss may be proved on a policy on slaves - ib.
- When payment of salvage is evidence - 720
- To prove the amount of salvage paid upon a recapture, the proceedings of the Court of Admiralty must be proved - 832
- By fire - - - - - 720
- The loss proved must be an immediate consequence of the cause alledged - 717, 720
- In what case wages and provisions shall be a loss within the policy - 721
- What shall be evidence of loss on a policy on
the ship - - - - -
- An insurer on goods is not liable for freight 728, 729
- How the plaintiff shall recover - - 729
- If he declare for a total loss, he may recover as for a partial loss - - - - ib.
- So he may recover as part-owner of an entire thing - - - - - ib.
- What remedy the insured shall have against the estate of a bankrupt underwriter - 731
6. When a loss improperly paid may be recovered back 732

PROCURATION.	Page.
Vide Agent,—Proceedings, (Trial). PROFIT.
Insurance of disaffected	- 94
Vide Subject matter (Profit).
PROHIBITED GOODS.
Vide Smuggling.
PROTEST.
Vide Evidence.
PROVISIONS (ship's)
How protected by the policy	- - 721, 723
In what case the consumption of is a loss within the policy	- - 721, 726
Vide Proceedings (Proof of loss).
QUALIFIED PROPERTY.
When an insurable interest	- - 105
QUARANTINE.
When the risk on a ship shall continue during quarantine	- - - - 264
RANSOM.
How the law now stands respecting the ransoming of ships	- - 503
When the purchase of a captured ship shall be deemed a ransom	- - - 515
RATS.
When the owners and master are liable for injuries by	242
REGISTER (ship's).
A purchaser has no title to a ship, either at law or in equity, unless he be in the register	- - 115
RE-INSURANCE.
Vide Interest (Re-insurance).
RENDEZVOUS.
Vide Warranty (Convoy).
REPAIRS.
Vide Average,—Proceedings, (Proof of loss). REPRESENT.

REPRESENTATION.

Page.

What shall be material, and how and when
made	- 450
Defined	- ib.
Different kinds	- ib.
When material	- ib.
Difference between a representation and a warranty	451
Written instructions, unless inserted in the policy, are only representations	- ib.
Duty of agents and brokers as to the representations made by them	- ib.
Their responsibility for any representation made without authority	- 452
At what time to be made	- ib.
If made when the slip is presented for subscriptions, it will not affect the contract	- ib.
A material misrepresentation, whether by the insured or his agent, and whether fraudulent or innocent, will avoid the contract	453, 456-7.
Though the person making it know not whether it be true or false	- ib.
Or believe it to be true	- ib.
Otherwise, if he state it only as belief	- 454
Or as matter of expectation	- ib.
But if he state his computation as fact , and it prove untrue, it will be fatal	- 456
How far the representation to the first underwriter is a representation to all	454, 772
When deemed sufficiently true	- 458
It is sufficient if it be true in substance	- ib.
If the risk be represented as less than that which is described in the policy, it will not affect the contract	- 459
A representation, though untrue, will not avoid the contract, if the insurer be not deceived by it	461
But if it be stated that a ship was ready to sail , when in fact she bad failed , this is fatal	- 463
Vide Concealment.

RESPONDENTIA.

Vide Bottomry.

RESTITUTION.

Vide Loss (By capture—By salvage).

RETURN OF PREMIUM.	Page.
Upon what principle this is founded	- 638
When the contract is void	- 639
1. For want of interest	- ib.
Upon an over-insurance	- 640
But there shall be no return upon a wager	- 640
Unless the contract be rescinded while it is executory	- 641
There shall be no return upon a re-insurance	- 643
The principle upon which the premium shall be retained upon a void policy	- 643, 4
2. The insurance being illegal	- 645
Though the insurance upon a trading with the enemy be void, there shall be no return	- 647
And though the insured be a foreigner and igno- rant of our laws	- ib.
3. For fraud on the one side or the other	- 648
If the policy be void for fraud on the part of the insurer, the premium shall be returned	- ib.
But otherwise, if it be void without fraud	- 654
Formerly there was a return of premium if the contract was void, even for fraud on the part of the insured	- 650
But the contrary is now settled law	- 652
Where the risk has not been commenced	- 652
Whether this may be, when it proceeds from the act of the insured	- ib. 652
And where the risk is not begun	- 654
When the voyage is divisible and part not begun	655, 657
Upon an insurance "at and from"	- 658
In what case usage will warrant an apportionment of the premium	- 659, 660
Where a contingency will divide the risk	- 660
Where the risk is entire	- 661
Where the premium is entire	- 663
Where the insurance is for a term	- 664
Where it is upon a life	- 666
Where the premium is computed at so much per month	- 668
Upon

RETURN OF PREMIUM—continued.	Page.
Upon the performance of some stipulation	- 669
Upon the ship's sailing with convoy and arriving	ib. 672
Reason of this stipulation	- 673
Meaning of the word " arrives "	- 674
What arrival will entitle the insured to a return	673, 4
What shall be a sailing with convoy within the stipulation, Vide Warranty (Convoy) .
If the underwriters be discharged before the ship can sail with convoy, there shall be a return	- 676
Deduction upon the return	- 676
Upon what ground this deduction is allowed	- ib.
When the insured shall have a verdict for the premium though there be a verdict against him upon the merits	- 654
REVERSIONER.
How a fire policy shall be assigned to him	- 809
RHODIANS.
Their marine laws, Vide Marine Law .
RICE.
Not comprehended under the word corn in the usual memorandum	- 834
RIGGING.
Vide Tackle.
RIOTS.
Whether the riots of 1780 were a civil commotion within the exception of a fire policy	- 791
RISKS.
Against what risks marine insurances may be legally made	- 215
Not against the fault of the insured	- ib.
Whether against the mistake of the captain	- 487
Not against any risk upon illegal commerce	- 215
Whether the lives of men may be insured	- ib.
In the case of Negro Slaves	- ib.
Vide Slaves. Effect

RISKS— continued.	Page.
What are within the common policy -	217
Effect of the words which specify the risks -	218
Shutting the port of delivery is not a risk within the policy -	ib.
Nor its being in the hands of the enemy -	220
What are excluded by the usual memorandum	221, 231
Purport of it -	221
It controuls the general words of the policy -	228
When introduced into policies -	222
For what purpose -	ib.
Form of it -	223
The word corn comprehends peas and beans -	ib.
But not rice -	831
Construction of the clause, " Free of average, unless general, or the ship be stranded " -	224
The two insurance companies omit the words, " or the ship be stranded " -	ib.
Held that they make a condition -	ib.
Held that they make an exception -	ib.
Whether the underwriters be liable for a loss upon the enumerated articles though they specifically remain -	227, 238
Whether upon a stranding they are put into the same situation as other commodities -	228
What shall be a loss by stranding within the memorandum -	230
In what case the insurers shall be liable for a partial loss upon the enumerated articles -	231
It is now settled that the clause, " or the ship be stranded " is a condition, and a stranding lets in all partial losses -	233
Whether the memorandum excludes the total loss of an entire individual -	239
If the ship be stranded it destroys the exception, and lets in the general words -	235
Meaning of the word stranding -	239
Running aground in the river by being-run foul of, is not a stranding -	240

RISKS—continued.

	Page.
To what risks the owners and master of the ship are liable	- 241
Damage occasioned by the fault of the ship	- ib.
Bad stowage, wet, theft, embezzlement, rats, &c.	242
Difference between the responsibility of carriers by land and by sea	- 243
The latter are answerable for theft, though all precautions be taken	- 243
Whether they are answerable for accidents in shipping and landing goods	- 244
To what extent they are liable	- ib.
At common law	- ib.
By statute	- ib.
But the insurers as well as the owners and master are liable for external theft	- 246
Remedy of the insurers against the owners and master	- ib.
Duration of	- 246
1. Upon goods	- 247
On board the same ship	- 249
Removed to another ship	- ib.
On board a store ship	- ib.
When they continue in a new ship, on goods bought with the proceeds of goods saved	- 169
In what case they continue on goods taken on board in the course of the voyage	- 142
They continue on goods during an unavoidable delay	- 257
If goods be insured from the loading thereof, the policy attaches upon the loading	- 260, 323
How long they continue in the lighters of the insured	- 251
How long in common lighters	- 253
If the owner of the goods take charge of them, the lighterman is discharged	- 256
Where the goods remain on board longer than usual	- 257
Where they are sold without unloading	- ib.
Where the general rule is controlled by particular usage	- 258

RISKS—continued.

Page.

Duration of.Upon goods.

Every underwriter is presumed to know the usage of the trade he insures - - - 259

The usage of one trade may be proved to shew the practice in another similar trade - - - ib.

2. Upon the ship - - - 260

When it begins - - - - - ib.

In France - - - - - 261

In England - - - - - ib.

When it is for a limited term - - - ib.

Where the insurance is “from” a place - ib.

Where “at and from” a place - - - ib.

Where it is “at and from” an island, like Jamaica or Guadaloupe - - - 358

Objections to the time of ending the risk on ships in English policies - - - 262

Whether the insurers be liable for any loss after the 24 hours, or the end of the term - 262, 3

Where the cause of the loss existed before - ib.

During quarantine - - - - - 264

During an embargo - - - - - 265

At what time the risk ends where a ship is insured from A. to B. generally - - - ib.

Where a ship is insured to Jamaica generally - ib.

Where a ship discharges part of her cargo, and is chartered for another voyage, in which she is to deliver the rest - - - 266

When the insurance is to the West Indies generally - - - - - 267

On the tackle and rigging, landed during a repair - - - - - 269

During an East India voyage - - - 271

With liberty to “touch, stay, and trade in any ports or places” - - - - - 272

What is meant by “any ports and places” - ib.

Where the liberty is “to touch and stay” only 273, 4

The general words will not extend the risk beyond its description - - - - - 274

A liberty to touch and stay “at any ports and places” means only places in the usual course of the voyage - - - - - 275

This liberty must be strictly adhered to - ib.

The

RISK—continued.	Page.
Duration of.
Upon the ship.
The risk may be properly commenced, though under unforeseen circumstances	- 275
Whether sailing from A. for B. which is an integral part of a voyage from A. to D. be a commencement of the risk from A to D.	- 276
Whether the risk continues though the ship do not touch at the places in their proper order	277
Where a ship has liberty to cruise for a certain number of weeks	- 197
3. Upon freight	- 278
When it commences	- ib.
If part of the goods be shipped	- ib.
If the ship be lost in her way to the port of loading	- 279
When a policy on freight of a homeward voyage attaches	- 279
A policy on freight from A. B. and C. to D. will not protect the freight from A. to B.	280, 323
Whether the risk may be changed	- 281
Effect of changing the risk	- ib.
In what case the taking of letters of marque on board will discharge the underwriters	- ib. 28;
ROBBERY.
When the owners and master are liable for, Vide Risk (Owners liable).
ROMANS.
Whether acquainted with the contract of insurance	5
To what extent they carried navigation	- ib.
ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE.
Vide Insurance Companies.
RUNNING FOUL.
Vide Loss (By collision).
SAILING INSTRUCTIONS.
Vide Warranty (Convoy).
SAILORS.
Duty of in case of misfortune	- 616
Wages of, when a charge on the insurer	- 538, 721
When

SAILORS.—continued.		Page.
When entitled to receive their wages	-	- 89
Cannot insure their wages	-	- 90
But they may insure goods purchased therewith	-	- 91
They may borrow money on respondentia, on their goods on board, but not on their wages	-	- 747
SALVAGE.
Vide Loss (By salvage).
SCOTT, SIR WILLIAM.
Character of his decisions		- 30
SEA LETTER.
Vide Documents .
SEARCH.
Vide Warranty (Neutral).
SEA RISK.
Vide Loss (By perils of the sea).
SEA-WORTHINESS.
Vide Ship (Sea-worthiness of).
SENTENCE (foreign).
Effect of, Vide Warranty (Neutral)— Ship (Conduct of).
SHIP.
Who shall be deemed owners of	-	- 115
What shall be deemed part of	-	- 727
Vide Register .
Sea-worthiness of	-	- 153
Implied warranty of	-	- ib.
Different degrees of	-	- 154, 476
At what time she must be sea-worthy	-	- ib.
What credit is due to a previous survey	-	- 155
A ship insured "at and from" need not be sea-worthy when the policy attaches	-	- 201
Whether a ship shall presumed to have been sea-worthy, till the contrary be proved	-	- 156
When the proof of unseaworthiness lies on the insurer	-	- 159
A witness who never saw the ship, may prove that from the statement of another witness, she was not sea-worthy	-	- 832
		Nothing

SHIP—continued.

Page.

Sea-worthiness of.

Nothing will excuse the breach of this implied warranty	- 159
Not the ignorance of the insured	- 160
Nor the insurer's knowledge of the state of the ship	- 161
In what case the insurer shall be liable for damage occasioned by the insufficiency of the ship	- 165
In what the owners	- ib.
In general it is sufficient if the ship be sea-worthy at her departure	- ib.
If a defect appear soon after her sailing, the inference is that she was not sea-worthy	- ib.
To be sea-worthy she must be properly manned	ib.
She is not sea-worthy without a pilot, where necessary	- ib.
If she be not sea-worthy during any part of her voyage, nothing subsequent will better her condition	- 410
There need be no representation respecting the state of the ship before sailing	- 475, 833

Changing the ship - 166

When this may be	- ib.
No clause necessary to warrant a change of ship, in case of necessity	- 167
If a man insure upon any ship he shall come in from A. to B. he cannot, by removing, change the ship	- 168
If the ship be changed by necessity, the risk will continue on new goods bought with the proceeds of those saved	- 169
When the best is done for the interest of all parties, the insurers will be liable	- 170
In what case the captain ought to hire another vessel	- 171
To what expences the insurers are liable in such case	- ib.

Insurance of goods in "ship or ships" - 172

When this may be	- ib.
If there be two policies on goods on board "ship or ships," and a ship with part of the goods be lost, the insurers on both shall contribute	ib.

If

SHIP—continued.

Page.

Insurance of goods in "ship or ships".

If goods be insured in a certain ship, and others in "ship or ships," and the latter be lost, the underwriters on the latter policy alone shall answer - 174

If goods of larger value than the sum insured in ship or ships, be put on board several ships, and some are lost, how the loss shall be borne - 176

If goods insured in several ships, by several policies, be all sent in one vessel to the several ships, and this be lost, how the loss shall be borne - 176

Employment and conduct of - 177

This must be according to law - ib.

In what case a legal disqualification will avoid the policy - - - - - ib.

Whether the contract will be avoided by the ship's acting in contravention of a treaty - 178

As to the offence of destroying any ship, Vide Loss
(By Barratry)—Loss (Fraudulent).

As to the risk upon the ship, Vide Risk (Upon the ship).

As to foreign built ships, Vide Warranty (Neutral).

How valued upon a loss, Vide Adjustment of Losses.

SHIPPING AND LANDING GOODS.

Who shall make good losses happening in, Vide Risk (Owners liable).

In private or public lighters, Vide Risk (Duration of).

SHIP'S HUSBAND.

Vide Agent.

"SHIP OR SHIPS" (insurance in) - 172
Vide Ship.

SHIPWRECK.

Vide Loss (By perils of the sea) Abandonment.

SIEGE.

Vide Blockade.

SLAVES.

Formerly insured as goods - 93

How the trade in them was regulated - ib.

This

SLAVES—continued.

Page.

This trade is now totally abolished - - 93

Whether slaves thrown overboard in a storm, or in a scarcity, be a loss within the policy - - 690

Vide Risk,—Subject matter (Slaves).

SMUGGLED GOODS.

As to the insurance of, Vide Subject matter (Smuggled goods).

Whether money, jewels, &c. intended to be clandestinely transported, may be insured - - 319

If the master be guilty of smuggling it is barratry 263

But if the ship be not seized for such smuggling till after the risk ended, the insurers will not be liable ib.

Vide Risk (Duration of).

A seizure by an enemy for smuggling is not a capture - - - - 680

STAMP.

Vide Policy (Stamp),—Fire (Insurance against).

STATUTES CITED.

An. Reg. Edward I.

3.—— c. 4. p. 548 n.

4.—— c. 2. p. 548 n.

Edward III.

11.—— c. 2. p. 12.

25.—— c. 2. p. 556.

27.—— c. 13. p. 548 n.

Richard III.

1.—— c. 9. p. 13.

Henry VIII.

28.—— c. 15. p. 556.

Elizabeth.

43.—— c. 12. p. 3, 11, 25, 26, 699 n

James I.

21.—— c. 3. p. 13.

Charles II.

12.—— c. 18. p. 63, 64, 557, 647.

13 & 14. c. 23. p. 26.

16.—— c. 6. p. 742.

22 & 23. c. 11. p. 742.

STATUTES CITED—continued.

An. Reg.	Page.
William and Mary.
4 & 5. c. 15. p. 57.
7 & 8. c. 22. p. 63, 64.
William III.
8 & 9. c. 36. p. 57.
9 & 10. c. 44. p. 65, 66, 67.
——— c. 52. p. 182.
11 & 12. c. 7. p. 556.
Anne.
1 stat. 2. c. 9 p. 557.
5. ——— c. 8. p. 63 n.
9. ——— c. 6. p. 2.
12. ——— c. 16. p. 649.
12 stat. 2. c. 18. p. 548.
George I.
4. ——— c. 11. p. 557;
——— c. 12. p. 558.
6. ——— c. 15. p. 697.
6. ——— c. 18. p. 28, 45, 48, 625, 697.
7. ——— c. 21. p. 744, 745.
7. ——— c. 27. p. 47.
8. ——— c. 24. p. 90, 557.
——— c. 30. p. 697.
11. ——— c. 29. p. 558.
——— c. 30. p. 698.
George II.
7. ——— c. 5. p. 794.
——— c. 21. p. 744, 745.
12. ——— c. 30. p. 63 n.
13. ——— c. 4. p. 551 n.
15. ——— c. 33. p. 63 n.
19. ——— c. 32. p. 144 n.
19. ——— c. 37. p. 60, 97, 103, 111, 116, 118, 122, 126,
133, 136, 143, 146, 152, 288, 587,
640, 710, 743, 761, 764.
22. ——— c. 33. p. 317, 318, 361.
26. ——— c. 19. p. 548.
29. ——— c. 34. p. 568 n. 569.
George III.
14. ——— c. 48. p. 129, 306, 774, 787.
16. ——— c. 5. p. 83.
19. ——— c. 67. p. 108 n.

STATUTES CITED—continued.

Page.

An. Reg.	George III.
22. ———	c. 25. p. 504, 570.
24. ———	c. 47. p. 263.
25. ———	c. 44. p. 306.
26. ———	e. 60. p. 116, 384, 712.
———	c. 86. p. 245.
27. ———	c. 1. p. 2.
———	c. 19. p. 384.
28. ———	c. 38. p. 58.
———	c. 56. p. 307, 309, 311.
29. ———	c. 68. p. 88.
31. ———	c. 54. p. 178 n.
33. ———	c. 27. p. 32, 38, 88.
———	c. 52. p. 66, 67.
———	c. 66. p. 283, 381, 505, 593 n.
34. ———	c. 9. p. 88.
———	c. 68. p. 384.
35. ———	c. 8. p. 684.
———	c. 63. p. 261, 322, 337, 341.
———	c. 80. p. 107.
27. ———	c. 97. p. 68, 75, 182.
33. ———	c. 76. p. 379, 383, 474.
39 & 40. ———	c. 67. p. 63 n.
41. ———	c. 10. p. 338.
42. ———	c. 99. p. 340.
43. ———	c. 160. p. 505, 551, 568 n.
44. ———	c. 98. p. 341, 786.
47. ———	c. 36. p. 93, 94, 554 n.

STOWAGE.

Vide Risks (Owners and master liable).

STRANDING.

What shall be - - - 234, 239, 240, 689

Vide Risks (Excluded by memorandum)—Loss (By perils of the sea).

SUBJECT MATTER (of marine insurance).

Smuggled goods	-	-	- 55
Insurance upon is void	-	-	- ib.
What is meant by	-	-	- 56
The insurer may take the objection though he knew the trade to be illegal	-	-	- ib.

SUBJECT MATTER— continued.	Page
Smuggled goods.
Doctrine of foreign writers on this point	56
Insuring the delivery of, restrained	57
How the insurance of the delivery of wool in foreign parts is restrained	58
Whether a trade prohibited by the laws of one country may be legally insured in another	58
The laws of England pay no regard to the revenue laws of other countries	60
Whether a policy on a smuggling adventure in a foreign country, contrary to a British treaty, be legal	ib.
Vide Smuggled goods.
Prohibited colonial commerce	62
No insurance can be legally made on any commerce carried on contrary to the laws of the dependencies of this kingdom	62
How the colonial trade is regulated by the navigation laws	ib.
Goods cannot be insured from the British West Indies to Gibraltar	64
Nor on board a Swedish ship from Madras to Gottenburgh	ib.
No legal insurance can be made on a voyage to the East Indies in contravention of the 9 & 10 W. III. c. 4, though the penalties of that act are repealed	65
How a licence from the East India Company shall be construed, where the whole of the voyage becomes impracticable	837
Though the Americans may trade to the British settlements in India , they must not carry on the coasting trade	68
If a foreign ship, trading to the British colonies under a treaty, violate the treaty, this will avoid a policy on her	74
But a policy on a legal cargo is not vitiated by a previous offence of this sort	ib.
Contraband of war	78
What articles are such	ib.
Insurance of, illegal	81
If sent to the enemy	ib.

SUBJECT MATTER—continued.

Page.

Contraband of war.

If exported in contravention of an embargo - 82

If sent to a British colony with which all intercourse is prohibited - 83

Or while it is in the hands of the enemy - 84

Commerce with the enemy - - - 85

All trade with the enemy without a licence is illegal ib.

Such licence must be strictly observed - 87

Goods bought of the enemy cannot be insured 86, 87

But this objection must be taken in the first instance - - - 36, 89Goods sent to a British settlement, while in the hands of the enemy cannot be insured - - 84But oil, the property of a neutral, may be insured from a neutral port to an enemy's port - 836The mere carrying of enemy's goods on board is no breach of neutrality - - - ib.If a ship in such case be seized by a British ship of war the insured may abandon - - - ib.Vide Enemy.Wages and effects of mariners - - - 89Mariners are to receive but a moiety of their wages abroad - - - ib.

They cannot insure their wages - - - 90

But they may insure goods purchased therewith - 91

The captain may insure his goods on board, or his share in the ship - - - ib.Or he may insure his commissions and privileges in the African slave trade - - - 841*Vide Sailors.Freight* - - - - 91In France freight not already earned cannot be insured - - - ib.In England freight expected, as well as the ship, may be insured - - - 92

What shall amount to a loss upon freight - ib.

Vide Freight.

SUBJECT MATTER— continued.		Page.
Slaves	- - -	92
Were formerly insured as goods	- - -	93
How this trade was regulated	- - -	ib.
Now totally abolished in this kingdom	- - -	ib.
Profit	- - -	94
How insurable abroad	- - -	ib.
Reasons against the insurance of it	- - -	ib.
Yet it has been holden to be legal	- - -	97
If imaginary profit of a cargo of goods be insured, the loss of the ship is a total loss, though the cargo be carried to the port of delivery in another ship	- - -	101
But the insured must shew that he would have made a profit had not the loss happened	- - -	102
TACKLE.
How protected by the policy	- - -	269
Vide Risk (Duration of—On ship) .
TENDER.
Vide Proceedings (Plea) .
THEFT.
When the owners and master shall be liable for	- - -	242
Vide Risk (Owners liable) .
TIME (Insurance for).
Not to be for longer than twelve months	- - -	338
Vide Policy (Stamp) .
When the risks on a policy for time shall end	261, 584
Vide Risk (Duration of) .
TOTAL LOSS.
Vide Loss,—Abandonment .
TRADE AND TRADING.
Vide Commerce .
TREATY.
Whether a trade carried on in contravention of a British treaty may be insured	- - -	60, 178
TRIAL.
Vide Proceedings (Trial) .

TRUSTEE.	Page.
When he shall have an insurable interest -	- 108
Vide Interest (Insurable) .

UNDERWRITERS.

Vide Parties to the Contract (Insurers).

Character of the French underwriters -	- 45
English underwriters -	- ib.
An agent or broker ought not to underwrite	301, 704
If he do, he may from necessity be a witness for the other underwriters -	- 704

USAGE OF TRADE.

What shall be deemed -	- 186
A few instances will not make an usage -	- ib.
Effect of usage upon the contract of insurance -	- 226
Every underwriter is presumed to know the practice of the trade in which he insures -	- 259
And he is bound by such usage -	- 270
Describing the voyage is a reference to all the circum- stances of it -	- ib.
The warranty to sail with convoy is controlled by usage -	- 375
The usage of one trade may be given in evidence to prove the practice of another similar trade -	- 259
Whether a practice prevailing for three years amounts to an usage of trade -	- ib.
Upon what principle the authority of usage rests -	- 707
How far it ought prevail -	- ib.
An usage not inconsistent with the terms of the policy may be received in evidence -	- 365
In what degree the terms of the policy are controlled by usage -	- 661, 727
Vide Evidence .

"USURPED POWER."

How these words are understood in a fire policy -	- 790
---------------------------------------------------	-------

VALUATION.

How fixed in a valued policy -	- 621
Vide Adjustment (As to value) .

VALUED POLICY.

Vide Policy (Different sorts).

VENUE.

	Page.
When it may be charged in an action on a policy	694
Vide Proceedings (Declaration) .

VISITATION AND SEARCH OF NEUTRALS.

The right of vindicated	81, 436
Vide Subject Matter (Contraband of war) ,— Warranty (Neutral—Forfeiture) .

VOYAGE.

What	180
When the illegality of it avoids the contract	ib.
No legal insurance can be made on an illegal voyage	181
As being contrary to the laws of this kingdom or any of its dependencies	ib.
Or the law of nations	ib.
Or the laws for protecting the monopoly of the East India Company	ib.
Though the penalties of the 9 & 10 W. III. c. 44. repealed	182
But a voyage will not be illegal because the whole of the voyage licensed by the India Company becomes impracticable	837
What shall be a legal voyage between America and the Briusb settlements in India	182
If an entire voyage be illegal in its commencement, an insurance on any part of it is void	72
How the voyage shall be described in the policy	321
The description of the voyage is a reference to all the circumstances attending it	270
When the loss of the voyage shall be a total loss, Vide 'bandement .
Deviation from	183
Deviation defined	ib.
Effect of	ib.
Distinction between an intended deviation and a different voyage	184, 326, 327
Why it discharges the underwriters	184
It determines the contract, though the ship resume her proper course	185
1. What shall be	ib.
What is meant by the usual course of the voyage	ib.
Stopping

VOYAGE—continued.

Page.

Deviation from.What shall be.

- Stopping at certain places is no deviation, if according to usage - - - 485
- But a few instances will not make an usage - 186
- The smallness of a deviation makes it not the less fatal - - - - - ib.
- It is fatal, though neither the risk or the premium would be greater if it were permitted - 187
- A liberty to 'touch and stay' will not warrant a breaking bulk or trading at a place 188, 275
- Yet a ship, with liberty to touch only, may trade, provided this occasion no delay, deviation or additional risk - - - - 835
- Nor will a liberty to discharge goods warrant a taking of others - - - - 188, 275
- If there be several ports of discharge, the ship must visit them in their order - - - 189
- Unless there be an usage to the contrary - ib.
- She may go to any one place - - - 190
- But if to more than one, she must take them in their order - - - - 190, 325
- If the ports of discharge be not particularly specified, she must take them in geographical order - - - - - 190
- But necessity will justify a variation in the order of the places - - - - - 191
- A liberty to touch "at any ports or places" means ports or places in the usual course of the voyage - - - - - ib
- Such a liberty is subordinate to the voyage, insured - - - - - ib
- It gives no power to change the voyage - 192
- In what case a cruising in quest of prize shall not be a deviation - - - - - 195
- Whether a letter of marque may chase an enemy 196
- How a liberty to cruise for six weeks shall be construed - - - - - 197
- A liberty to take letters of marque is construed strictly - - - - - 198
- A liberty to chase, capture, and man prizes, will not justify convoying a prize - - - 199

When

VOYAGE— continued.	Page.
Deviation from.
What shall be.
When an unusual duration of the voyage amounts to a deviation	199
Time spent in repairs is not an unnecessary delay	200
An intended deviation will not discharge the underwriters	201
When a previous design to touch shall be only an intended deviation	324
Distinction between a different voyage, and an intended deviation	324-5
What shall be the consequence of sailing on a voyage different from that described in the policy	326
Whatever may be the intention of the insured, if the ship sail on a different voyage from that described, the underwriters are discharged	ib.
If freight be insured from A. to B. but the goods are intended to be sent to C. the policy is void	ib.
If there be several tracks to the place of destination, the master should be at liberty to chuse	203
2. When justified by necessity	ib.
If the captain aim to perform the voyage in the shortest and safest manner, a departure from the direct course is no deviation	ib.
The extent of the deviation must be justified by the degree of necessity	204
A deviation is justified by necessity, though the cause of the necessity be not amongst the perils insured against	ib.
1. By stress of weather	ib.
2. Want of necessary repair	207
Putting into port to lighten, if too heavily laden, or to take in ballast, if too light, is no deviation	208
But a ship must not trade when she puts into a port for repairs	209
Yet a ship having liberty to touch , may trade, if it occasion no delay or additional risk	835
3. To join convoy	210, 354, 355
4. Succouring ships in distress	211
5. To avoid capture or detention	ib.
6. Sickness of the master or mariners	212
7. Mutiny of the crew	ib.
When a deviation shall amount to barratry,
Vide Loss (By barratry).

WAGES (of mariners).	Page.
When and how payable - - -	89
Incurred during a repair, when a general average	538, 721, 726
Whether insurable - - -	90, 91
Whether money may be lent on respondentia on wages - - -	747
Vide Sailors—Subject Matter (Wages) .

WARLIKE STORES.

Vide Subject Matter (Contraband of War).

WARRANTY.

Nature of - - -	346
Different sorts - - -	ib.
How construed - - -	347
How performed - - -	ib.
Effect of the breach of - - -	348
How made - - -	349
It must appear on the face of the policy -	ib.
A paper wrapped in, or wafered to, a policy, will not make a warranty - - -	350
But it may be written in the margin - - -	ib.
In what case the contents of a separate paper will make part of the contract - - -	ib.
That the ship was safe on a given day -	ib.
It is sufficient if she was safe on any part of the day	ib.
To sail by a given day - - -	351
Nothing will excuse a non-compliance - -	ib.
Not even an embargo - - -	352
Or an irresistible force - - -	ib.
And a warranty to sail after the day must be performed with equal strictness - - -	ib.
What shall be a compliance with this warranty -	353
If she sail before the day, but not in the direct course, this will be a different voyage, unless it be to join convoy - - -	353
If an embargo be proclaimed, and the ship put herself into it, this will excuse a non-compliance	358
Breaking ground with intent to sail, though immediately obliged to put back, is a compliance	359
What shall be a departure from the port of London	ib.

WARRANTY.—continued.	Page.
To sail with convoy - -	- ib.
This must be strictly performed -	- 359
Effect of non-compliance -	- ib.
Whether she may sail without convoy, if she be disabled in her way to the place of rendezvous	360
1. It must be with the regular convoy -	- ib.
Convoy what - -	- ib.
How the officers, &c. of the convoying ship shall be punished for misbehaviour -	- ib.
What sort of convoy is meant by the warranty	361
The mere protection of a ship of war is not convoy - -	- 362
2. And from the place of rendezvous appointed by government - -	- ib.
When the ship shall be protected by the policy to the place of rendezvous -	- 363
3. And with convoy for the voyage -	- 364
What is meant by convoy for the voyage	364, 5
Whether different convoys, for different parts of the voyage, be convoy for the voyage	367, 8, 9
4. The ship must have sailing instructions -	- 368
How far these are essential to sailing with convoy - -	- ib.
If the ship arrive at the place of rendezvous before the appointed time, and find the convoy gone, this will not excuse the want of them -	- 369
In what case the want of them will be excused	371, 2
If the master of the ship lose any opportunity of getting them, it is fatal -	- 373
The warranty must be expounded according to the usage of trade - -	- 375
5. The ship must depart, and continue, with the convoy	376
She must get under weigh with the convoy	ib.
And not leave it without necessity -	- ib.
If separated, she must rejoin the convoy as soon as possible - -	- 378
If she get under weigh in time, but wait for the captain till she lose her place in the convoy, it is fatal - -	- 776
But

WARRANTY—continued.

Page.

To sail with convoy.The ship must depart and continue with the convoy.

But she is not obliged to keep with the convoy at all events - - - 378

If the master, through fraud or negligence, desert the convoy, this will discharge the underwriters - - - - - ib.

By statute no ship shall sail without convoy 379

Penalties for sailing without, or deserting, convoy ib.

In such case the insurance shall be void - 380

And bond must be given to sail with, and not desert, convoy - - - - - ib.

Exceptions - - - - - 381

When a ship shall be within the exception 382

Duty of the captain with respect to signals 381

Of neutrality - - - - - 384

Meaning of this warranty - - - - - 411

Describing a ship as belonging to a neutral state is equivalent to a warranty - - - - - 439

But if there be only a verbal representation it will not affect the contract - - - - - 442

Nature of it - - - - - 385

How expressed in the policy - - - - - 442

What shall be deemed neutral property - - - - - ib.

When a neutral subject loses the protection of the neutral flag - - - - - ib.

It is sufficient if it be true when made - - - 387

The chance of future war is a risk within the policy - - - - - 388

1. When falsified by condemnation as prize - ib.

What shall be a court of competent jurisdiction in questions of prize - - - - - ib.

When the judgment of a foreign court shall be conclusive - - - - - ib.

The sentence of a belligerent consul resident in a neutral country, has no authority 389

Otherwise if the neutral state acquiesce 390, 712

Or if the sentence be pronounced in the court of a co-belligerent - - - - - 390

By comity, foreign sentences are conclusive in our courts - - - - - 398

WARRANTY—continued.

Page.

Of neutrality.

Falsified by condemnation as prize	- 391
But this comity is not universal	- ib.
It is not regarded in France	- ib.
When first adopted in England	- 392
Consequences of it	- 393
Stipulations that certain proofs of neutrality shall be conclusive	- ib.
When our courts may examine the sentence notwithstanding a foreign judgment	- 394
If it be ambiguous it will not be conclusive	- ib.
Neutrals are not bound to take notice of regulations made by belligerents contrary to the law of nations	- 397
Whether, being informed of them, they ought to take notice of them for their own safety	399
If an insurer know of them, he should give notice to the insured	- 400
If both be ignorant, the non-observance of them will not affect the contract	- ib.
The ship must be navigated according to subsisting treaties	- 397, 408
A sentence as good prize is conclusive without stating any ground	- 401
If it do not necessarily falsify the warranty its truth may be proved	- 402
A condemnation as enemy's property is conclusive, though manifestly unjust	- 403
But it is conclusive only as to the points which it professes to decide	- 411
The meaning of the warranty is that the ship shall be neutral to the purposes of being protected	- 406, 411
As to the documents which ships are required to have, Vide Documents.
The want of any of these is only presumptive evidence against neutrality	- 408
If the ship be not properly qualified to sail as a neutral any part of the voyage, the underwriters will be discharged	- 409

WARRANTY—continued.

Page.

Of neutrality.Falsified by condemnation as prize.

As if, for the temporary want of a document,
she be subject to detention - - - 410

A condemnation because the captain was an enemy, contrary to a French ordinance, does not falsify the warranty - - - 414

Our courts are bound to give credit to foreign sentences, though founded on a system of plunder - - - - - ib.

Ships ought to be furnished with the documents which, by treaty, are agreed to be evidences of their neutrality - - - 416

A condemnation for want of a document not required by the law of nations, or by treaty, is not conclusive - - - 420

If upon the whole of the sentence it can be collected that it proceeded on the ground of enemy's property, it is conclusive - - - 422

The party objecting to a sentence is bound to shew that it did not proceed on the ground of enemy's property - - - 425

Of what force are foreign ordinances in our courts, - - - - - 426

The want of any requisite to prove neutrality is conclusive - - - 428

By express stipulation in the policy, the insured may avoid the effect of a foreign sentence - - - - - 430

If the sentence have ~~one~~ legal ground, it will be conclusive, though ~~grounded~~ to several advantages - - - - - 433

A sentence of prize will be conclusive, though it collect the indicia from which that conclusion is drawn from ordinances not binding in other states - - - 434

What shall amount to a forfeiture of neutrality 435

Resisting visitation and search - - - 436

Whether a neutral be bound to submit to visitation and search considered - - - 439

Law of nations defined - - - - - ib.

Doctrine of Hubner - - - - - ib.

Doctrine

WARRANTY—continued.

Page.

Of neutrality.What shall amount to a forfeiture of neutrality.

Doctrine of the Consolato del Mare	-	-	440
Of Bynkershoek	-	-	ib.
Of Vattel	-	-	441
French ordinances	-	-	ib.
Attempts of the Northern Confederacy	-	-	442
Judgements of our Courts of Admiralty	-	-	444
Belligerent cruisers have a right to search all neutrals	-	-	445
No neutral sovereign can deprive them of this right	-	-	446
The penalties of resistance	-	-	447
But the neutral must have had notice of the war	-	-	449

WEAR AND TEAR.

Is no loss within the policy	-	-	492
Vide Loss (By perils of the sea).

WET (damage by).

When the owners and master shall be liable for	-	-	242
Vide Risk (Owners and master liable).

WISBUT (laws of).*Vide Marine Law.WITNESS.Vide Evidence.WOOL. (exportation of).Vide Subject Matter (Smuggled goods).WOOLLEN MANUFACTURE.

When introduced into England	-	-	12
-------------------------------------	---	---	----

WORMS.

If a ship be destroyed by, it is not a loss by perils of
the sea	-	-	492
Vide Loss (By perils of the sea).

WRIT OF ERROR.

Suing out, is a breach of the consolidation rule,
though for manifest error	-	-	702

FINIS.

ground is good without the words vi et 705
e facias on a recognizance for the peace,
a pacem are sufficient without vi et armis.
483. s. 19

VICTUALS AND VICTUALLER.

Alien strangers may sell imported victuals
the gross. 645
8 Edw. 3. c. 6. all dealers in any kind of victuals shall sell for reasonable profits, and chief officers of the town shall see they do in pain of treble value of the thing exor-tly sold. 646
Butchers selling unwholesome meat shall be punished, margin. ib.
Assise may dispose of their victuals. 646
Hen. 8. c. 2. the lord chancellor, &c.
set the prices upon victuals ib.
shall not restrain officers of cities, &c. havauthority to set the prices of victuals. ib.
3 Edw. 6. c. 15. if any butchers, brew-bakers, poulterers, cooks, costers, or fruit-ers shall conspire to raise the price of victuals, &c. they shall forfeit, &c. 647
Geo. 3. c. 11. no brewer, innkeeper, victualler, shall be sued for advancing the price of strong beer and ale in a reasonable degree.
ib.

VICTUALOUS JUDGMENT.

the punishment inflicted by the common law.
449, s. 9
was formerly inflicted for conspiracy. ib.
is now obsolete; no instance of it since Edw.
3. ib. (N. 5)

UNITARIANS.

Unitarian dissenters saved from penalties of declaring the Trinity by 53 Geo. 3. c. 160. 411

USURY.

shall be deemed usury. 613
usury is restrained by common law. 613 for persons in general are restrained by the statute 12 Ann. c. 16. from the offence of usury. 614
in what cases the usurious contract is void.
614 to 624
in what cases the usurer is liable to the penalties of the statute 12 Anne, c. 16. 620 in what way the offender may be proceeded against. ib.
what is required in the pleadings in an action, information for usury. 621
the rate of brokerage is allowed for the raising of money. 623

WAIFS.

to take waifs or stray, before they have been claimed, &c. is not felony by the common law.
149

WAIVER.

the king seize a recusant's lands, it is a waiver of his power to seize the goods. 375

WALES.

Hen. 8. c. 6. a murder in Wales may, on indictment, be tried in the adjoining English county. 93

WARRANT.

Killing an officer whose warrant gives him no authority to make the arrest, is only manslaughter. 193
So also where a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner. 104
In what cases homicide by an officer endeavouring to execute a warrant is justifiable. 81, 82
How a warrant for surety of the peace is to be executed. 481
In what cases a warrant is necessary to arrest an affrayer. 491

WATCH.

The inhabitants are not bound to keep watch in a new way, or make amends for a robbery therein, or to repair it, unless license be first obtained upon ad quod damnum. 698

WEAVER.

A weaver who has received silk to work may be guilty of larceny by taking part of it feloniously away. 143

WIFE.

The principle upon which she is excused for felonies committed in her husband's company.
4. (N. 7)

WITCHCRAFT.

Conjurers, witches, and sorcerers, distinguished and described. 356
They were anciently punished as heretics, by the writ de heretico comburendo, &c. ib.
In the reign of Edw. 3, a sorcerer was permitted to excuse himself by swearing that he would no longer be a sorcerer. ib.
The offenders divided into four kinds by 1 Jac.
1. c. 12. 356
The punishment inflicted by that act. 357
By 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. no proceedings shall be had against any person for witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration, &c. ib.
Whoever shall pretend to exercise these arts, or to discover stolen goods, shall be imprisoned for one year, stand four times in the pillory, and find sureties. ib.

WITNESS.

In conspiracy, it is no excuse for a defendant to say that he was only examined as a witness on the trial. 447

WOOD.

Constables may search the houses of suspected wood-stealers. 166

WOOL.

See EXPORTATION.

The offence of exporting wool. 351

WORDS.

The great question examined, whether words only

only spoken can amount to an overt act of compassing the king's death. 13, 14 (N. 6)	How far words shall be said to inspire such degree of terror as is necessary in forcible try.
How far reproachful words to a judge may amount to a high misprision. 64	Threatening speeches, in terrorem populi , amount to a riot.
How far words against the king amount to a contempt of his person and government. 66	How words must be expressed and understood to make a writing libellous.
No affront, by bare words, &c. however false, malicious, or aggravated, can amount to such a provocation as will alleviate homicide from murder to manslaughter. 98	WOUND.
No one ought to be bound to good behaviour for any rash, quarrelsome, or unmannerly words, unless they tend to break the peace, or to calumniate the state, &c. 486	In what cases the wounding another may be justified or excused. 483, 484. 490.
But a recognizance of the peace may be forfeited, even by words directly tending to a breach of the peace. 483	WRITINGS.
No quarrelsome or threatening words shall amount to an affray, &c. 487	Writings cannot, by the common law, be subject of larceny . 14
	But by 2 Geo. 2 c. 25 to steal the writings therein enumerated is felony of like nature, stealing the property they are calculated to cure, &c. 19

END OF VOL. I

